It is hoped that there be no home study assignments below the seventh grade when the average student is about 13 years of age. This is wholly in accord with the teaching and writings of "accepted" educational doctrine.

Whether your child has home work assignments or not, begin when he is in about the fourth grade, and see to it that on every evening preceding a school day (at week-end choose either Friday, Saturday or Sunday regularly), he shall apply himself for a regular short period by the clock at a regular place at some worthwhile mental exercise.

Be there no assignment, let him read from well selected books. During the study period let him not be interrupted. If his friends call let them wait until his study period has ended.

Parents should like to hear from parents and teachers on this subject.
