Rotary's Influence Told By International Officer

Declaring that "these are great days in which we are witnessing the passing of an old economic order, and therefore must adjust ourselves to an improved one," Ed R. Johnson, first vice-president of Rotary International, addressed Rotarians from 21 clubs at the Community House Monday noon. He was introduced by Joseph B. Mills, governor of this 23rd Rotary District. Mr. Mills, who is director of all advertising and publicity for the J. L. Hudson Company, was introduced by Dr. Herbert E. Moore, president of the Birmingham club.

Vice-president Johnson, who comes from Roanoke, Va., traced the history of Rotary International from its beginning in Chicago in 1905 to its present spread in over 70 countries of the world, with a membership of 148,000 in 3,600 clubs. He stressed the part that Rotary has played in elevating the concept of service in modern business and professional life, and prophesied that Rotary will measure up to its new and perhaps greater obligations in the new economic conditions that are being set up in the entire world, and especially in the United States.

"Rotary is a service-philosophy of life, and a good Rotarian is one who desires to serve, then goes out in the world and does serve," emphasized Mr. Johnson. "Rotary is recognized as a great influence for good in Europe. One instance of this was revealed when Hitler came to power in Germany. He issued an edict that would oust many social and business and fraternal organizations, but because he held that Rotary was no secret order, and that it had done much for the world, he allowed Rotary Clubs to continue."

Rotary's history in other countries, notably Cuba and South America, records the settlement of many international difficulties through the application of Rotary's sixth object: "The advancement of understanding, good-will, and international peace through the establishment of a world fellowship of business and professional men united in the ideal of service," Mr. Johnson said.

Hon. Paul H. King, referee in bankruptcy, and former district governor, was present at the meeting, as was A. McKeown, former president of the Detroit club.

The Community House auditorium was used for the meeting. Under the direction of Mrs. L. N. Pyle and her aides, the service was effected quickly and well.

next June will amount to $306,000. The total bonded indebtedness of the district for schools is $1,200,000.

"One of the distressing movements now sweeping over the nation is the thought that seeks to stop state-supported education at the 10th grade, thus eliminating the upper two grades in high schools," stated Mr. Hart. "Those behind this plan propose that all further education be administered through private support. Then there are those who argue that so-called 'fads and frills' must be eliminated from the modern school curricula. Such subjects as music, drawing, manual training, and domestic science were put in the school at the insistence of parents themselves. I consider them more essential than Latin, French, and similar subjects.

"This depression has brought many problems to the school, as well as to the home. Since the home problems are reflected in the students and the teachers, because all human beings bear a relationship to economics, there have developed many problems in the classroom. Frankly, because teachers who once had but 24 pupils now have more than 40, individual attention has been made very difficult. This is a very serious situation, because I firmly believe that every boy and girl is a personal challenge to the school teacher; each is different in talents, in home environment, in physique, and background, in inclination. To treat them as a single mass is wrong, and does not fit them for later victory over the manifold problems of life out in the world.

Defends Students

"Then there is the problem that arises from that group of parents who are so busy in their business and social lives that they can pay but little attention to their children's increasing problems and perplexities. Seldom do parents from this group come to school to learn, first-hand, what they can do to assist in the real education of their offspring. Who can take their vacant places so many times as the children come home from school with problems on their lips, or in the evenings who can counsel with these growing lives—admitted to be the most precious assets of any household?

"Much justifiable criticism has been and still can be directed at the students themselves, of course. But a great deal of student unrest, I believe, comes from the general irritability manifested by the adults themselves. To this extent our youth has carried more of the depression than we ordinarily realize. Rare, indeed, is the parent who does not wish success for his boy or girl; this success, determined later in children's lives, is made possible, or is hindered, by what takes place when children are young and forming their attitudes and characters. That is why I bespeak every possible parental assistance for today's youth, both within the home and in relation to the school. My contacts with boys and girls here in Birmingham convince me that, on the average, they are on a very high moral standard."

a 24 to 12 lead. Symons of the Misfits ended the game with a short throw, making the final tally 24 to 14.

In an uninteresting preliminary, the two teams which were eliminated in the semi-final round played a consolation game. Stroup's Market emerged the two-point winner over Bergman's, 26 to 24. Eggleston, left forward for the Drug team, was high scorer with 11 counters.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Ward Cruickshank, 356 Southfield avenue: "The committee in charge of the bridge tournament for the benefit of the Community House, which was completed Friday, is grateful to Birmingham merchants for their co-operative spirit in helping to make the affair a success, and also for the prizes donated."

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Melvin C. Hart, principal, Baldwin High School: "This year our teachers have had very little difficulty in using their scrip, due, I think, to the fact that the Board of Education has adopted a policy of redeeming it when due."

Work Of Ann Arbor Artists Shown Here

An exhibit of the works of several Ann Arbor artists, most of whom are on the faculty of the University of Michigan, will open today at the Artists' Market, to continue for an indefinite period. Among the contributing artists are Jean Paul Slusser, head of the architectural department at the University, who will display two water colors, "Sicilian Waterside" and "Spanish Fishing Boats"; Fred H. Aldrich, who has several pastel flower studies, and Myron Chapin, whose "Men Swimming and Boats" and "The Road to Eastern Point" are outstanding.

"In Afternoon Light," an oil painting by Ernest H. Barnes which received at one time an award from the National Academy of Art, and five other oil paintings of Mr. Barnes will also be shown, as well as several water color sketches done near Taos, N. M., by Jane Stanley, a well-known Michigan artist.

Aside from the paintings on display, two large silk batiks of Myron Chapin will also be shown.

doorway, with the huge bronze door swung open, you behold the tropical splendor in the trees, bushes, and flowers that border the reflecting pools—especially that larger pool so familiar in the colored photographs that reveal the Singing Tower. And, just outside the door, a few feet from the the steps, lies a plain marble slab, facing north and south, upon whose face is inscribed the very brief: "Edward William Bok, 1863-1930." Beneath this slab the body that once sheltered the indomitable gentleness of this sturdy immigrant youth rests in Eternal Sanctuary, among the birds and flowers and bells and softened tread of human feet that pay tribute to him who Dreamed to Reality the Lovely of Life. Indeed, I like to imagine that Mr. Bok's sarcophagus is not beneath that slab at all—but rather in the uplifted and regenerated hearts and minds of those who, having sought sanctuary in this quiet garden, go back to the restless world less tired than they left it. Certainly, may we not venture to say, the spirit of Edward William Bok has built an enduring and beloved sarcophagus in such hearts and minds. And thus he has fulfilled his trust, has come into his inheritance: "Make you the world a bit more beautiful and better because you have lived in it."

Anton Brees, son of an Antwerp, Belgium, carilloneur, fits into the Dream of Mr. Bok as a song fits the plumage of a red cardinal. He loves his job, and works hard at it, too. Four times a week the Tower sings from its 70 bells, as his swaying body and pounding hands skip back and forth over the carillon's clavier, the while his feet also do their part in the intonation of the deeper noted bells. In a tiny elevator we ascended from the entrance in Mr. Bok's study to the top of the shaft that stops where Mr. Brees performs. He played a selection of his own improvising for us, though the time for the regular program was an hour and a half off. He then took us to his private study in the Tower's top, where he spends much time in preparing the programs. In there is an upright piano—another love of the music-lover whose melodies mingle harmonically with the breeze that warms Florida so much of the year. He played with the skill of an artist on his piano—then invited our children, Billy, John, and Susan, to "entertain me with some music." Which they tried to do, with usual childish embarrassment, of course. (Miss Patty Hawley, of Oakland avenue, whom we met in Lake Wales, and who was with us at the Tower, more bashfully refused to play—although she did accept a helping of California raisins that Mr. Brees offered to all of us after the impromptu "recital.") We left the delightful company of Mr. Brees a half hour before his noon-hour concert, and of course enjoyed the latter a short distance from the Tower itself.

Because I don't want to tire you with further praise of this Singing Tower and Sanctuary of Soul, I'll cease pounding my typewriter. Next week I'll refer briefly to St. Augustine and its old Fort Marion, from whose dungeon Seth Parker last week broadcast his Tuesday night program, as you may recall. We visited his four-masted schooner, the Seth Parker—at a quarter apiece. But, until next week, we'll cease.

Baldwin, to act as its advisor. Mr. Hubbard has not decided whether he will accept.

Club Closes Membership

The club's move was made following a meeting attended by officers of all questionable clubs at Baldwin, and by Mr. Hart and Superintendent Charles W. Crandell. The meeting was part of a campaign against fraternities and sororities which was started at Baldwin last fall.

Further proof that the drive is bringing results came Tuesday morning when a member of the Coronet Club, a girls' organization, told Mr. Hart that this club planned not to admit any more members. The state law provides that any club which pledges its members or that takes in new ones on the approval of its membership, is illegal. According to Mr. Hart, this action will make the Coronet Club a legal organization.

Mr. Hart was pleased with the results of the campaign.

"I believe this is only the beginning. The results show that we have had splendid co-operation from the students," he said.

Another girls' club, known as the H. C. S., gave a signed paper to the principal early this week, stating that the group had disbanded. The paper was signed by 10 members.

No Money For Materials

A letter from Harold Smith, secretary of the Michigan Municipal League and a member of the Washtenaw County Emergency Welfare Relief Commission, read to the Commission Monday night, revealed that "Work Divisions" are to be substituted for the CWA program after April 1, and that under the new arrangement "very little money, if any, will be available for materials."

The letter suggested that municipalities include in their new budgets items for the purchase of materials for work relief.

The letter follows, in part:

"You are doubtless aware of the fact that the Federal Government has ordered the discontinuance of CWA at the end of this month. Beginning the first of April, 'Work Divisions' will be substituted for CWA and very little money, if any, will be available for materials. This new scheme will apparently be a compromise between CWA and the old style of work relief.

Municipalities Must Help

"If your municipality is carrying on any CWA projects, it is very important that you make sure that all the material you need under the allotment within your county is purchased before the end of the month. The requisition should be in the hands of the vendor as soon as possible, but by Mar. 29th at the latest.

"Under the new program beginning April 1, it will be necessary for municipalities to furnish materials if really constructive and socially sound projects are to be carried on. It is suggested that you seriously consider putting an item in your budget, if it has not already been fixed, for work relief. Inasmuch as work relief cannot be used for activities which are proposed to be financed through the regular municipal budget, the possibility is suggested of assembling under the budget item of 'work relief' the various items for material which are found elsewhere in the budget.

"We have tried to obtain the latest information on the new program, but even this is a little vague. However, it is certain that local units will have to furnish the major part of the funds for materials, if anything constructive is to be done. By assembling items for material under work relief as suggested above, there will obviously be more flexibility. Also, technical question as to what is normal operation and what is work relief can probably be avoided."

60 Men At Work On School Project

About 60 men are working 24 hours per week on the school building repair project at present, Louis M. Randall, business manager of the schools, said yesterday.

Practically all of the inside painting has been completed, he said, but lack of materials is still holding up the work. This is especially true of the remodeling of Hill School for Board of Education and administrative offices, for which considerable heating material is still needed, he said. Materials have been coming through in larger quantities the last few days, however, he added.

Mr. Randall said he understood that although CWA was to be discontinued as such on April 1, welfare labor for uncompleted CWA projects was to be furnished under a new program after that date.

BOARD REFUSES TO ACT ON STUDENT PETITIONS

The Board of Education last Thursday night refused to grant student petitions asking that the opening date of the spring vacation in the Birmingham schools be advanced to Mar. 23 to conform with that at Cranbrook School. One petition was signed by a group of Baldwin High School students, and another by Cranbrook students. Superintendent Charles W. Crandell recommended the petitions be denied, and in the absence of action by the Board, the dates for the Birmingham schools vacation will remain Mar. 30 to April 9.
