Community House Sponsors New Hospitality Campaign

Birmingham women will be given an opportunity to mingle with their friends and make new acquaintances through a hospitality campaign to be launched this month by the Community House, under auspices of the social committee. The program includes a series of informal bridge teas, which will be given each month throughout the winter. The teas will be sponsored by the various women's organizations now enjoying privileges of the House for their regular meetings.

The first of the series will be given on Friday, Oct. 19, when the Birmingham Branch of the American Association of University Women will act as the hostess organization.

The plan was inspired by the success of similar parties given by the Community House last year. Because of the large number of women attending previous affairs of this kind, it was decided to make them monthly events, and to give local women's groups an opportunity to participate. Although each bridge will be sponsored by a different organization, all will be open to the public, and guests will be given the additional privilege of entertaining their friends. Each hostess may take as many tables and invite as many guests as she desires.

For the first party, under auspices of the A. A. U. W., Mrs. Ada Scheinmohr Moore is general
