8 O'Clock TOWN

Our idea of a motorists' paradise is to be able to take the U-turn at Woodward and Maple avenues like the police car does. It looks like good clean fun. You start across on the green light, change your mind in mid-light, and swing around still on the same light, and come back to you starting point. There is a joyous abandon to the maneuver that catches your fancy, and sometime, when the scout car is at the other end of town, we intend to try it.

Would Also Accept It On Water Bills If Schools Will Redeem It

Providing positive assurance can be obtained that the scrip will be redeemed when due, the City of Birmingham will agree to accept Birmingham School scrip in payment of city taxes and water bills, according to City Treasurer Harold H. Corson.

Mr. Corson discussed the matter with the City Commission Monday night, and Tuesday he wrote a letter to the Board of Education, requesting authority from that body to redeem out of cash received in school taxes any scrip that might be taken by the city in city taxes or water bills, and which might not be redeemed by the school district out of its own funds.

To date, the School Board has been in a position to retire all scrip when due, and although the scrip has always been payable on school taxes, the city has never made it acceptable in payment of city taxes. Several taxpayers have asked whether this could not be done.

ODE "BEFORE THE PRIMARIES"

See the great political Whitehead for election time! Halos polished, wings refashioned. Would they take a dirty dime? Say, they're champions of the people! Honest, stalwart, free from Toss a coin and watch the scramble—the votes are in. After all the votes are in. Everett's Palace of Hash is becoming a veritable "Mindy" character. Any night, citizens who might have stepped from the pages of a Damon Runyon yarn might find themselves going about with a vivacity surprising in folks who have just downed a cup of the Hot version of how coffee should be brewed.

If a name could ever be given to the park you know the park—that beautiful block between the Municipal Building and the Baldwin Library—we have several to suggest. How about Welfare House or Dr. H. H. Hyde Park? The Field would lend it a transitory popularity at least, or if you insist on dignity, why not Pride of those three heroes of the moment, Schoobly Rowe, General Johnson and a prominent local citizen in a triple embrace? The last named could be selected by a popular referendum.

On nights when you walk beneath the marquee of the Birmingham Theater, you unsuspectingly submit your head to the torrid glare of 42,000 candles (we mean, of course, candle power). This data was carefully collected by this inquisitive department. There are 710 60-watt bulbs, and the resultant heat is estimated to be able to exterminate a small polar bear during the showing of a double feature.

The rumor that Arthur "Red" Gould, manager of the championship Moulton's softball team, was found on the Poppleton diamond at midnight after one of the games a few weeks ago, arguing with an imaginary umpire about a play that had been history for hours, may be false, but it has the atmosphere of truth. At least, we're sure that if the figure was anywhere at all, it must have been "Red."

WE HEARD IT SAY BY— John S. Black, member salaries committee, Oakland County Board of Supervisors:

"I don't believe the county salary list for next year will be much, if any, larger than it was this year."

Central Press Staff Writer NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Alfred E. Smith and the American Liberty League are not meeting with the enthusiastic response that apparently they believed they would have.

Behind the old-line conservative Republicans and conservative Democrats are shying—and even doing a bit of denouncing.

Concerted opposition to the New Deal is likely to arise in midwest Republican strongholds rather than from the heart of financial New York, the genesis of the American Liberty League.

MASTERING THE MACHINE

More vividly than ever it is being brought out in the textile industry that the great industrial production problem is for man to master the machine.

Machines not only cut costs (depriving workers of jobs) but increase production (causing overproduction—under the present scheme of things).

Thus the textile industry is meeting with an evolution which has brought on a disastrous stalemate. The solution of our labor-saving machinery, with the consequent fall in production costs and sale prices, thus increasing consumption to such a degree that employment and wages would increase rather than decrease.

All that is promised on the assumption that there will be coordinated control of production, collective agreement with organized workers and a general shortening of hours and a broader spread of employment in all industries. Even then, there can be no success if a business is overcapitalized and cuts up all its earnings in interest or dividends.

Such basic and broad-scale movements can be brought to a successful conclusion only by use of the full powers of the government. And there is resistance to that.

WHAT MACHINE DOES

Francis J. Goldman, head of the textile workers' strike committee, tells of the effect of the machine.

Gorman says: "The president of the Greenwood S. C. cotton mills reported to the Southern Textile Association: 'We installed automatic spooling and warping, using only one-half as many operators on these machines as we required for the old spoolers and warpers. Our labor costs of this department were reduced 40 per cent. As a result, we were able to cut five weavers on each shift.'"

"The result of these machine installations are reported in detail. One mill reduced the labor cost on a given amount of cloth from $100 to $30. Another mill reports a 50 per cent saving in labor and production increase of 20 per cent. In the weaving department alone it is estimated the savings run from 40 to 60 per cent. One New England manufacturer reports the automatic looms pay for themselves in 20 weeks."

Economists are not so enthusiastic. They grant the savings, but they say the resultant overproduction without broadening of markets eventually will cause collapse, unless there is planning.

PEDESTRIAN HIT BY CAR, BADLY HURT

Driver Released After Making Statement To Prosecutor In Sunday Night Accident

Lyman Donnelly, 55 years old, of 1485 East Humphrey street, was recovering in St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital, Pontiac, today from severe injuries received Sunday night when he was struck by an automobile on Woodward avenue at Lincoln avenue.

Steve Chalk, 47, of 127 Woodward street, Pontiac, the driver of the car which struck Donnelly, was released after making a statement to Prosecutor Arthur P. Bogue Monday, in which he said he was driving north on Woodward avenue with his wife and daughter, and failed to note Donnelly's presence until he heard a thud as the car rounded the turn from the double pavement to the single highway at Lincoln avenue. Chalk got out to find Donnelly lying on the pavement.

Chalk said he was traveling about 20 miles an hour, and that he believed Donnelly stepped from in front of his own car, which he had parked at the curb, and walked directly into the path of the oncoming automobile. Donnelly was carrying several empty beer bottles when he was struck, and was believed headed for a store on the opposite side of Woodward avenue.

His injuries consisted of six fractured ribs, bruises on the sides and back, and internal injuries. He also suffered from shock. Police found Chalk's license and headlights to be working properly. The fact that the street is poorly lighted at that point, and that several road signs obscure the vision, was believed at least partially responsible for the accident.

Mrs. Godfrey was born in Exeter, Me., and had lived with her daughter here for the past 10 years. Her husband, James Godfrey, died 28 years ago.
