Ten Months in the C. C. C.

(In this, the second of a series of articles on life in the Civilian Conservation Corps, the author, a Birmingham youth, tells about his arrival at the camp site in the Northern Neck, Md., from Camp Custer, where the company of 206 men had undergone a two-week "hardening up" process.)

By STEPHEN T. GAIL

"Bravo! Cheerio! Whoopie!" community for 200 men where one or two cries rang out as at last our train arrived in the promised land in a drizzling rain. We had spent a rather sleepless night, due to the newness of the situation—the crossing of the train on the ferry at the Straits of Macinac—and the general excitement of anticipation. Then, too, our hastily improvised beds, made by removing the backs of the train seats and laying them flat, were none too comfortable.

Everyone smoking, laughing, talking. One group of celebrants singing lustily. Gilbert playing his violin majestically while his pals beat time in the other end of the car. The lieutenant sitting alone and smiling amusedly. Fellowes strutting from one car to another reminded me of those few people who, on every train, enjoy making the rounds of the cars to see what is going on. I saw one of the fellows, Swede, had a tin of flat fifies when he got on the train. When he got off—not a one left. Popular guy.

Continue In Trucks

Trucks met us at the station where we disembarked hastily and huddled under tarpaulins, raincoats or anything handy to keep off the rain. Never will I forget how desolate the country looked. Upper Michigan was a new sight through a dead-looking little town, which later proved to be lively enough, and climbed a long hill and edged out into the countryside. Suddenly leaving the main highway, our trucks plunged into green and timbered region, turning and twisting to the course of the road until at last it seemed we must be miles from nowhere.

We finally entered a clearing in the pines where several army tents were pitched. Hot food was being served in the pouring rain. Hot hams and poured coffee under no covering but God's blue and dripping sky. Wet and uncomfortable, we were warmed quickly by the food and a little later we put up the rest of the tents.

The ensuing days were busy ones, as we had to set up a livable

DON'T GO THROUGH ANOTHER WINTER WITH YOUR OLD FURNACE COIL

It's a nuisance—a money waster—a fuel-eater—gives unsatisfactory hot water—and hurts your furnace heating ability. We will make an allowance for your old heater and furnace coil on this purchase. Save fuel. Tests prove you want one shovel of fuel out of every five with a furnace coil. In many cases, fuel savings alone pay for the heater. Sell us your old coil and heater—heat your home for less money—and enjoy low-cost, ever-ready hot water.
