SUGGESTS TAX PLAN TO CLARIFY MOORE-HOLBECK PROVISIONS

Sparks Recommends Campaign To Clarify Moore-Holbeck Provisions

A county-wide program of advertising and publicity to acquaint taxpayers with the advantages available to them by paying their delinquent taxes of 1932 and prior years under the terms of the Moore-Holbeck 10-year moratorium plan was recommended by County Treasurer Charles A. Sparks in an address Monday noon in the Community House before the Birmingham Rotary Club.

Mr. Sparks traced briefly the history of the enactment of the Moore-Holbeck Bill into law by the State Legislature, and outlined its provisions, under which any property owner may pay his delinquent taxes in 10 annual equal installments.

The first installment is due Sept. 1 of this year, and must be paid before May 1, 1936, to prevent the property from being offered for sale. Installments paid before Sept. 1 will escape penalty and interest charges, but to those paid after that date a 4 per cent penalty will be added, plus three-quarters of one per cent a month until paid. Each of the succeeding nine installments will be due before Sept. 1 of each succeeding year.

"It is my personal opinion that right now would be the best time in the world for a county-wide advertising and publicity campaign to inform the taxpayers of what will happen to their property if this first installment is not paid," Mr. Sparks declared.

Sparks also described the work done by the county in 1933 and 1934 to correct property delinquency. The work was financed by CWA funds. Before the project was started, he said, the number of delinquent properties in the townships was as high as 75 per cent of the total roll. In some townships, property was being assessed at all, and in others the same property was being assessed two or more times.

Some cases were found where the property had never been formally decided by the government. Mr. Sparks said. He described how "tax sharks" took advantage of the errors in the tax rolls, informing property owners of the faulty descriptions, and offering to get their taxes refunded for a 50 per cent fee. This abuse has been almost entirely eliminated and errors in the assessment rolls have been reduced to a minimum, Mr. Sparks said.

"Don't pay any tax on any piece of property unless the description is correct and unless you're sure it's yours," he warned in conclusion. "For once you pay, you'll never get it back."

Birmingham Youth Invited To Visit 'Beerless Garden'

An invitation to the youth of Birmingham to visit and enjoy themselves at the "Beerless Garden" was issued by the Birmingham Youth, Inc., under the guidance of Mortimer S. Hyde of Royal Oak.

The opening date of the unique entertainment place, where soft drinks and ice cream are to be served instead of beer and liquor, but where outdoor dancing facilities will be available at many beer gardens, will be announced shortly.

The project was developed as an answer to questions raised by parents of Southern Oakland County youth, by Mrs. Fred M. Alger, member of the State Liquor Control Commission, and by the WASHINGTON—When Congressman Bertrand H. Snell of New York remarks that "President Roosevelt has come perilously close to what some people call impeachable grounds" (in urging the passage of certain legislation despite doubts as to its constitutionality), it doesn't signify much.

Snell, as Republican leader in the House of Representatives, has strong partisan reasons for finding the move faulty; he can with the present White House tentatively.

It is of considerably more consequence that a substantial number of Democrats on Capitol Hill are as critical (though more confidentially so) of the presidential utterance than is the up-state New Yorker.

WHAT F. D. DID SAY
President Roosevelt did not, to tell the truth, urge, in effect, as Congressman Snell implies that he did, the enactment of laws of doubtful constitutionality.

Specifically, he was discussing the Guffey Bill to regulate the soft coal industry.

His plain implication was that, in his judgment, the proposed law is constitutional—but he recognized that there are many authorities to the contrary. In substance, his request was, "Pass it; I have as good a right to my opinion as they have."

NOT CUMMINGS' DUTY
"But why," demand the critics, "doesn't Attorney General Homer Cummings" (who is the President's official legal adviser) "notify Congress that, in his opinion, the law will be constitutional?"

The answer is that he doesn't have to.

The attorney general is adviser to the PRESIDENT, to the EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—and by comparatively recent enactment, to the Veterans' Bureau.

He is enjoined to advise Congress. Maybe he hasn't the right to do so.

Eight times, in the past, beginning in 1820, attorney generals have been asked to give legal advice to Congress. In each instance they have refused, on the ground that they are constitutionally limited to be executive, not legislative legal advisers.

Maybe Attorney General Cummings already has advised the White House.

If precedent counts, his responsibility ends there.

young people themselves as to where young men and women of today could find wholesome entertainment without being exposed to the liquor evil.

Mrs. Alger helped make the project possible by donating $500 to the inter-club council of Youth, Inc. Labor on the project, including attractive decoration of the garden, is being done by the eight units of Youth, Inc., under the guidance of Mortimer S. Hyde of Royal Oak.

My New York by JAMES ASWELL

By Central Press
NEW YORK—Small Palaver: I see by the papers a lot of proing and coning on the subject of whether women should be admitted to bars in other cities. There is singularly little of that problem here.

Often the question here faces the men: how are they going to find it to place at the long counters with so much chattering femininity blocking the way? Now I may be old-fashioned, even with a taint of the Puritan in me, but women in bars annoy me. It is not so much that they are wicked as that they are insane.

Except for the perennial drunk-debber—a rarer phenomenon than viewers-with-alarm complaint, thank heaven—few women go to bars to drink. They go to them, either because it is, they imagine, the swank, the fashionable, the smart, the chic thing to do; or else they go for the same reason that they used to attend the innocent tearooms of yesterday—in which, during the latter years of prohibition, they sometimes got their liquor in teacups, because it was a raffish conventional thing to do.

However, unreconstructed Victorian that I may be, I have never known a chic and charming lady who found alcohol a problem. They have more vigorous and probable concerns, even if these consist in nothing more weighty than being in love.

But as soon as women are forbidden to caress the brass rail with their hair, the struts-a-pump, they will set up a loud lamentation. They will want nothing else.

They will pout and persevere. Finally, the barkeeper takes the legislators will have no choice but to give them their way.

TIDYING A TOMB
Grant's tomb, which has grown a bit dusty and musty in the 33 years of its existence, is to be spruced up with the aid of federal largesse.

George Burnside, custodian of the monument, is a Manhattan character of purest ray. He was not only a personal friend of Grant himself, but he was the man of the crew which built the tomb.

Few know—I didn't until I got to New York—into the matter today—that the remains of both General Grant and Mrs. Grant rest in the tomb. Or maybe every literate person does know it and only chatter writers are no rusty on facts which should be at their fingertips.

Perhaps the most prevalent superstition is that General Grant's horse, which he loved dearly, was also buried nearby. This, I think, has been spread by some of the less documented sight-seeing bus-barkers. It is, indeed, a romantic concept, recalling warriors of old who were always interred with their steeds.

General Grant's beautiful white charger, Traveller, has achieved a place in romantic memory just beneath his master, where he belongs.

Many hundreds of people visit the tomb daily and most of them are foreigners. A large proportion of these are, no one knows why, Germans.

The tomb can do with a thorough cleaning, all visitors agree. This reporter respectfully suggests, also, that the various flags, regimental and otherwise, which hang unprotected in the tomb, dusty and rotting, should be more carefully preserved.
