

"Not a scratch."
She raised her left arm and curled it around his neck; he low-ered his face until his check touched hera. "Tout're such a terrible man," she whispered. "Oh, such a terrible man!"

He told you a few of the most won-derful.lies or record, and when he found you'd been hit he cried like a haby. Swore that if you'd died he'd commit suicide—provided I dien't kill him fart?" He lifted her to a sitting position. "There's old Cupid Hobart sitting over yonder. Look at him. He's still blubber-lus."

"Ken!" Roberta called weakly.
The ex-ranger got up and limped painfully over to ber, knelt and took her hand. "You're a grand liar."
she murmired, "and a grand myler,
