By Central Press
 NEW YORK—Notes for Stories: The two old ladies, grandly white-haired with whalebone in their collars, whorled through a merry square each Sunday afternoon in an unbelievable ancient limousine. But a car black and glistering, with a chauffeur as old as his passengers. Sisters, probably. Living on the increment from a production presser and hoping to see their days unwind with some of the grandeur remaining. Exaggerated, kindly, going to send little birthday and graduation checks to half a dozen thoughtless nieces, and nephews. They read Kathleen Norris and Fannie Hurst and Temple Bailey. They were shocked by Gertrude Stein's "Black Ocean" but have perused no hotcha novels of this era, any one of which could bring on a heart attack for them both.

The man in the nice heavy coat, muffled, derby and gloves who lums a cup of coffee every night from a puzzled Third Avenue drugist.

The pretty little 12-year-old girl who peddles newspapers every evening to all the saloons of the newspaper district—Forty-first to Forty-fifth streets, East Side. She wants to be an artist's model, can conceive of no higher destiny. Will probably marry at 17 and live as happily and respectably as most, for all the signs of apprehension for her presence in the drinkery's corner.

The girl in the fishbowl at the Casino de Parise. She sits before an arrangement of mirrors and reducing glasses, as to appear actually inside a small aquarium in the bar, at which tipplers gaze. Her costume is such a minimum. She supports her mother and unemployed father, the story is, and is impeccably proper in private life.

The girl who operates the marionettes in Russell Patterson's puppet show at the French Casino. She must not only recognize all celebrities instantly and see what Fido, the plaster of Paris siren on strings, barks and speaks to them, but she must know what has been doing of late, so as to comment on it. That taxi driver, in whose cab I have chanced to ride half a dozen times in the past few years, who steered for grand opera and sings lustily as he drives.

The legless Times Square beggar with the barking bull pup, reputed to be worth a fortune.

The Lexington avenue butcher I have known for years who is ceaselessly shocked and indignant over bloodshed and oppression in foreign parts.

The Wall Street sandwich man who found the wallet containing $50,000 in negotiable securities and got a job and a new suit of clothes to his amazement.

The elevator operator, aged 61, who enters every prize contest he can discover and who finally won his first award—$10 in cash—the day he was ordered out on strike.

MORE RAW MATERIAL
 The blind newsdealer with the young woman assistant in Third Avenue. She explained once: "I'm no relation of the proprietor, only a friend." And the morning when nowcasting, proprietor and assistant had suddenly vanished.

The girl juggler's assistant who wanted, more than anything else in her youth, to become a Pullman porter.

The press-agent who wears a full dress suit on impressively, who is literate and thus stands out from his brethren and who was relieved when the column of chatter he used to do was withdrawn, giving him a chance to be a press-agent and breathe easier.

The night club impresarios of the golden prohibition years, writing their memoirs and stating, with more romance than accuracy, "and we never sold a drop of liquor in our places, as old patrons will recall."

But the vein is inexhaustible, thank heaven!

DeMolays To Hear 'Germany' Schultz

"Germany" Schultz, who won the title of all-time all-American football center when he was a member of the University of Michigan eleven, will be the speaker at a banquet sponsored by the Hassberger Chapter, Order of DeMolays, to be held in the Masonic Temple at 6:30 p. m. Tuesday.

Other attractions on the program will be accordion solos by John Church; selections by a brass band and baritone solo by Victor Peck. William Merz will be the toastmaster. A chicken dinner will be served, and Masons and friends of members of the chapter are invited. Reservations may be made with Clifford Streib or William Merz.

YOUTH SURRENDERS SELF AS DESERTER

Robert Fowler, 20 years old, of 560 Ann street, gave himself up to Birmingham police Friday as a deserter from the United States Army. He has been missing from Fort Brady, M. ch., since Jan. 1, 1934. He turned himself over to officers at Fort Wayne for disciplinary action.
