FEED YOUR LAWN TO ELIMINATE WEEDS

By The MASTER GARDENER

Controlling lawn weeds is one of the biggest problems home owners have to deal with in keeping their grounds attractive. Many methods have been suggested for the elimination of these pests. Some of them have merit while others are in no sense practical. One thing we must keep in mind is that weed seeds are always present and that any method which only temporarily removes them is doomed to failure. The only satisfactory method of assuring a weedless lawn is to produce a mat of grass so thick that weeds cannot get a start in it, or, if they do get started, they will be choked out by the heavy growth of grass and its deep, closely matted roots. Grass will not produce such growth unless it is on a soil which contains an adequate amount of the right kind of plant food.

Most of our soils are depleted of much of their fertility and a complete plant food must be added to produce satisfactory growth. Best results can be secured by applying a complete, scientifically balanced plant food at the rate of four pounds to every 100 square feet.
