WELFARE LOAD DROPS IN YEAR

Industrial Activity Is Large Factor In Reducing City Unemployment

With the increased tempo of factory production, local construction work, and the usual summer landscaping and gardening, employment all contributing factors, the rolls of the Birmingham welfare are lower than they have been in several years.

C. R. Price, welfare case worker in the county, has a total of 90 families on the local rolls at the present time in contrast to the situation a year ago when the city was supporting 168 families.

Significant in the total of 90, says Mr. Price is the fact that of that number perhaps only one-third, or about 30 men are actually employable—that is, physically able to handle a normal man's job.

Most of the men on the rolls, as asserts Mr. Price, would have to be given light jobs or some task especially suited for them.

Mothers' Pensions Included
The welfare distribution in the city at the present time, Mr. Price points out, is divided equally among the federal government, state and local agencies, each source contributing one third of the support budget.

Mothers' pensions of which five are listed on the Birmingham rolls, are being taken care of by the county. To be eligible for these pensions, mothers must have no visible source of income, and must be widows. The law states that they shall be given $10 per week for the first child and $2 per week for each additional one, says Mr. Price, but, in actual practice, the amount paid to each mother is determined by the probate judge.

Mr. Price, despite the coming of winter and consequent unemployment among those now occupied with summer tasks, believes that his rolls will not increase to a degree because of expected employment through projects pending under the Works Progress Administration. Under that set up, the federal government will pay wages of the laborers, and perhaps a certain small percentage of the cost of materials.

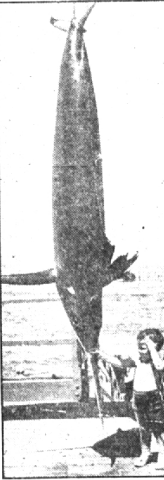

Parry Skeptical
But City Manager James W. Parry foresees no definite help from the government in the way of helping keep the relief rolls at a minimum. For one thing, he declares, the government has specified that its share of local relief burdens will cease, Nov. 1. Then too, he adds, there are so many contributing factors to the successful resumption of a project under the WPA as to make it very uncertain. For instance, if Mayor Parry were to submit his projects for approval, he would have to omit any man on the relief rolls who has a family larger than five. The unskilled monthly wage of $16, the government says, would be insufficient to support a family larger than five. Large families would automatically fall back upon local aid.

Then too, the labor on any local project is supposed to be entirely local in personnel, says Mr. Parry, and by the time he had made allowances for the large family stipulation, and then tried to supply the right number of skilled men from his depleted roll of eligibles, there would be only 15 men left. That number, he continues, would include less than three or four skilled men.

Colonel Betty

Maybe the fact that she sat next to the governor at the Kentucky Derby two years ago explains why Betty Alexander, 24 years old, of Tulsa, Okla., received a commission as colonel on the staff of Gov. Ruby Laffoon of Kentucky. Anyway, Betty, shown with the document, is now a Kentucky colonel.
