

FIRE PRECAUTION STRESSED AGAIN

Chief Griffith Warns On Danger Of Spreading Grass Fires

An indication of the present grass fire danger presented itself last Tuesday when a small grass fire spread over a two block front before the fire department could arrive. Although no serious damage was done, this fire and the thirteen others already reported by the local fire department during August should serve as a warning to local residents to be on their guard against the rapidly growing grass fire menace.

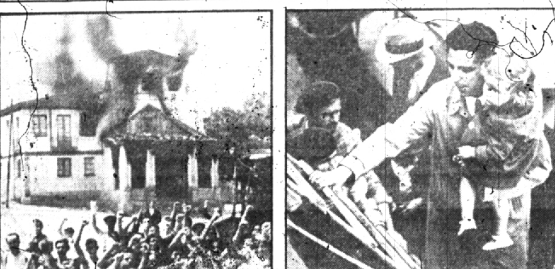

Stressing again his fire warning of several weeks ago, Griffith urged the people of this city and surrounding areas to take the utmost care with fire. He pointed out that fires should be started only where it is absolutely necessary, and then only when there is a little wind. Never should the waste paper or rubbish be burned near tall or matted grass, and no one should think of burning off a vacant lot at this time.

It may seem foolish that we advise these precautions for such a seemingly great danger, but few people realize that a grass fire, left alone for twenty minutes, would have a good chance of sweeping through the entire city, doing incalculable damage. Every home living near a vacant field should have a water supply on hand at all times for fighting fires—should promptly extinguish even the smallest blaze.

Parents are urged to keep their children out of any grass for these fires spread rapidly and quietly, and there are instances in this city of children being trapped by a blazing circle of fire.

Smokers should be careful with their matches and finished cigarettes, for with the country in its present dried up conditions, the smallest spark may kindle a costly fire.

Typical Scenes in Bloody, Revolt-Torn Spain

These pictures are characteristic of scenes in almost any Spanish town or city as Fascist revolutionaries pushed their drive to overthrow Spain's leftist Popular Front government. The top photo shows workers, armed by the government, leaving Madrid in trucks to meet the advancing rebels. Lower left, Communists give their salute after being a church which they claimed had been destroyed. Lower right, a young American refugee and his daughter disembark at Bayonne, France, after fleeing the fiery tortures over all Spain.

To Mrs. Henry Berg—My Neighbor, Friend

By Ruth Shan
He who can convey true feelings by the use of words is indeed a great person. I have read many tributes to the living and the dead that moved me more so with I had that special gift of writing.

It is not that I may have been deceived by the words of a man, but rather that I may have been deceived by the words of a woman. I am very doubtful.

Nothing
I wish to see you and I am very doubtful. I am very doubtful. I am very doubtful.

She took many extra steps that nothing must be omitted that would give pleasure. And oh, the joy of living that was hers! Life here seemed to her, it may have offered few excitements, but she always seemed to find it exciting just to live. Always the latest of the group, she could outstep any of us. Many came again and again to be heartened by the warmth of her welcome.

I think especially of her reading to me. She had the ability of absorbing things as they came, forgetting the transgressor and before she knew it she was on to the next page. I never thought of her as old for I could hardly find so much youth in the eyes of an old woman. I think especially of her reading to me.
