Civic-Minded Club Makes Known New Year's Plans

Drive For Safety Feature Of Program For Coming Season

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles by Marjorie Egan Potter showing the relation of women's organizations to community life in Birmingham, and their efforts to improve the city's civic and cultural interests.

Almost 50 years ago, there was heard for the first time in Birmingham, the still small voice of civic consciousness. It was a persistent sound that grew stronger with the years, evoking the little village from its complacency to its vital needs and civic responsibilities.

Such was the beginning of the Birmingham Woman's Club, the power among local women's organizations. Since that time the club has played a prominent role in Birmingham's civic and cultural drama.

With Mrs. John S. Black in the president's chair, the club is looking forward to another successful year. As in the past, this season's program has been planned to include both civic and cultural needs.

"Since 'education for living' is the theme adopted by our General Federation, it seems fitting that stress this year should be placed upon problems affecting our everyday lives.

"In accordance with this ideal, we have decided to sponsor a drive to promote safety, both on the street and in homes. Although our plans are as yet indefinite, the idea may possibly develop into a safety campaign.
