Birmingham before today

By MINNIE HUNT SALTZER

There used to be a low frame dwelling at the east side of the Hunt property and east of this place was a cottage which has since been remodeled in to a somewhat large two story building.

East of this house was a third dwelling which was located at the extreme west side of the lot and near the street line. This was a low rambling affair with a long open porch on its east side. The second house was painted but the other two were not. A row of large willows at the edge of the road way gave plenty of shade for all three houses. A family by the name of Kettle lived in the first of these houses in the early 80's. Later this place became the home of Mrs. Morgan, a daughter Alice and a son Isaac. Mrs. Morgan was a dear old lady and was somewhat of an invalid. I believe that her daughter Clara was the wife of Mr. Ed Gree, brother of Mrs. Addie McHenry. The Greers had several children and lived in the country. Mrs. Morgan's sister, was Mrs. James Esmond. Her name her was Mrs. Olin, and the mother and Mr. and Mrs. Esmond live on the corner of Townsend and Henriette streets.

Mrs. Saltzer

After the death of Mrs. Olin and Mrs. Esmond, the Morgans sold their property on West Brown street and moved to the Olin house. Alice was married after they moved to this place. After her mother's death she went to Orchard Lake to live. I believe she lived on the east side of Orchard Lake Road and near the junction of Orchard and Walled Lake Road, and that it was here she passed away suddenly several years ago. The next house belonged to people named Wright but the first person unt I recall were Mr. and Mr. Hatch and a daughter Ella and a son, Archie. I have been told that there were infants of the husband of Mrs. Ella Pappleton Hatch. The Hatch family left Birmingham many years ago. Mr. George Fay, one time village constable and his son, William, lived here for a number of years. Mr. Fay was a brother of Mrs. Samuel Jarvis and had an older son, Lewis Fay. Mr. Fay owned a raw boned black horse which he drove around town in a buggy and had fashioned too buggy. He used to rent this rig out for twenty five cents an hour. Nellie Randall and I rented for one hour, one afternoon, but unfortunately we were gone two hours. Mr. Fay had planned to drive with a friend and when we reached home he was walking up and down the path under the willows as mad as a hatter at us. Needless to say, he never rented that rig to us again.

There was a tight board fence at the rear of the Fay residence, and Mr. Fay used to put up a target on his fence and practice shooting. The fence was about four feet high, and one day Mr. Fay aimed too high. The bullet sped across the lot north of his place, across the street and through the "Bay Window" of the house on the north side of Townsend street. It passed through the living room and across the dining room and embedded itself in the wall. Miss Eva Lombard and her mother, Mrs. Quick lived in this house. Mrs. Quick's chair stood just beneath the place where the bullet hit and he had just left the chair and gone out into the kitchen when the bullet came whizzing through the house. It scared Mr. Fay plenty and I don't believe he ever tried that stunt again. Finally Mr. Samuel Masters, brother of Martin Masters and husband of Mrs. Nettie Balliet Masters bought the house. Both he and Mrs. Masters passed away here. Mr. Masters had a daughter by a former wife. She was the first wife of William Hilliard and was the mother of Florence and Samuel. The Hilliards lived in the Morgan house when Florence and Sammy were youngsters.

After the death of Mr. and Mrs. Masters the Masters property became the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Hilliard and family and here Mrs. Hilliard passed away. This has continued to be Mr. Hilliard's home until recently. He now lives on West Maple Avenue and is the caretaker of the St. James Episcopal Church. The third house and the lot east of it belonged to Mrs. J. Miles. She was a real old lady when I first knew her in 1886. A relative, James Frost, made his home with her a part of the time. After her death the house was rented to Mr. Alex Peck's father. Later it became the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth Randall. Mr. Randall built a large barn on the north east corner of this property and facing on Hunter street. This barn housed the Engine and their hing outfit which was owned and operated by Mr. Henry Randall and his son, George and Ellsworth. Mr. Randall in the meantime had purchased the Morgan property and moved the old Hunter house to this site where it stands today. The property on the north east corner of West Brown and Henrietta streets belonged to Mr. Miles Evarts father of Mrs. Edith Hall and Mrs. Pachael Blumber and grandfather of Mrs. Hattie Koutz, Miss Anna Hall, Mrs. Emma Schlnack, Mrs. Retta McClelland, Mrs. J. Ruth McClelland, Mrs. Florence Fitzpatrick, and Mrs. La Verne Blumberg and Mr. Theodore Evarts. Mrs. Miles Everts was the former Miss Ruth Methaniels. There were several other children and grandchildren. Theodore Evcarts mother's given name was Hannah. I believe his father and a brother died of small pox while his parents occupied his grandfather's house. His first wife, Allie, died of the same disease during the epidemic of small pox in Detroit about 1895. He now lives in the west.

Mr. and Mrs. La Verne Blumberg live at St. Johns, Michigan. They have a son, Allan and a daughter, Beatrice. Mr. and Mrs. David McClelland La Verne and two grandsons and two granddaughters Mrs. J. Ruth Metheny and Mrs. Florence Fitzpatrick live in Detroit. Mrs. Metheny's husband is the well known artist and writer, Mr. J. Renwick Metheny. Mrs. Fitzpatrick's husband, Mr. Paul Fitzpatrick, is employed by the government at the present time.

Other residents of the old Miles Evarts house were Mr. and Mrs. McAllister Randall and family and later Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Bunvan and family.

Mr. Harry Hare purchased the property and built the brick house which now stands on the corner of Henrietta and West Brown streets. This was the Lowe home for a few years.
