THIS AND THAT

family figure grace our yard and house. But, for two grown-ups and three children, Jack will linger for many a day—always in their memories. Personally, I really like Jack's presence, for 12 years as a precious heir in bringing up the children, they'll know, will not forget that old dog—just a dumb animal who, I am sure, will make them kind to all animals, and kinder than otherwise to human beings.

In a letter from our summer cottage at Epworth Heights, telling me about Jack's passing, Mrs. Averill summed up all our feelings, and those of every doglover, I'm sure, when she wrote: "It has been said that 'no news is good news'—but not in this case, and I hardly know how to write to you now. It is like a bad dream to me. But our good old doggie will not be here to greet you when you return—he has gone on a long journey. Nobody knows how much I loved, and still love, that old dog. I used to get awfully tired of his snoring, to let him in, or let him out, but every time I would remind myself of what he meant to all of us. It is strange that an animal can express so much patience, loyalty, faithfulness and devotion, that one weeps to have him go. I think that there never was and never will be as beautiful a dog as Jackie."

Personally, I agree with those who hold that, listed among those most precious of earthly possessions that money cannot buy, must be included the love and devotion that may be developed between humans and dogs.

My good friend, George E. Enright, of the Huron County Tribune, at Bad Axe, takes me to task as follows:

"We have been wondering and we wonder still why George Averill of the Birmingham Eccentric, never misses an opportunity to stick the knife, long and deep, into the innermost inwards of Wilbur Brucker. Of course Cousine lives in Birmingham, but that is not Brucker's fault. As a boy governor, he people think Brucker did very well, but may have lacked experienced judgment on some political problems. At least he was honest and affable, and tried hard."

Averill accuses him of being ambitious. May be so, but facetious and veiled slams don't make out anything worse—well who ever heard of ambition making a man unfit for office.

Brucker is at least a good Republican and against the New Deal. Would Averill want to say as much for Cousine. We are sorry to see friend George waste so much good talent.

Perhaps I am not as easy-minded toward politicians as you are, George, especially when I have made more than a casual study of their records. I have always liked, and still like, Mr. Brucker as a personality; as politicians go, he probably ranks above the average in character and academic ability; but I do hold that any man—whether in public or private life—who is so consumed with ambition that he willingly climbs higher on the shoulders of others, can hardly do justice to his current job. As attorney-general, later Governor, of Michigan, Mr. Brucker stood by while the Grand Trunk railroad, for instance, managed to have our State hold it a new right-of-way between Royal Oak and Pontiac, costing somewhere between six and eight millions of dollars, so far as I know, the State has not yet received a dime on the contract. The kind kind contract that Wilbur stood for. That's only one instance of incompetence; you see, George, Brucker in those days was so busy making speeches he really didn't have time to do justice to the routine duties of his jobs. The best way I know of for enduring progress in any job is to do the present job well. Do and not merely speak about it. I said Brucker is inherently decent, spends much time "doing things," not lark, like Frank Murphy; however, he has spent too much time developing his voice-box, too little time using the working tools in his craft-kit.

LOCAL YOUTHS ENJOYING TRIP

In Detroit on September fourth. They are using specially built English bicycles, with rear gears for hill climbing, and the bikes are operated by a lever on the handle bars instead of the foot pedals as the American bicycles. Several amusing incidents have resulted from some of the boys forgetting that the brakes were not in their customary American place.

Bill Mead, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Mead, 639 Puritan was shocked to find, in England, the William Mead street, cemetery, was the first gravestone in the cemetery was in memory of one William Mead.

According to Bill, all of the boys, and Mr. Bicketts also, are greatly enjoying the trip, though being only two difficulties. One is the peculiar way the ocean affects some of the travelers and the other is that the natives of European countries can't speak their languages the way our English textbooks say it should be done.

George and Herby Hunt, are the sons of Mr. and Mrs. George Hunt, 567 Aspen Rd., while Fred Erick Dye, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Dye of Lake Park.

IMPROVEMENTS ARE UNDER WAY

It is the aim of the subdivision owners to provide a complete architectural supervision of all homes built to insure the development of the area as a harmonious unit.

The four homes being constructed were designed by an equal number of well-known architects. J. Robert F. Swanson, French, English and two patterns after the New England farm home. Modern heating and mechanical equipment are being placed in these new structures. The Harold Brook Co. is constructing the four homes, all of which will be offered for sale this fall.

Plans and layout for this new section are now practically complete, and they give every indication of a desirable development. This fall, when weather conditions are right, the extensive landscaping program will be completed. This includes the planting of trees and shrubs along the three avenues; trees in the rear of lots, where footpaths, sidewalks are provided; and the gardening of the three average entrances from Oak Street.

All trees planted will be 10 to 15 inches through the trunk and will be the finest hardy stock instead of root stock, thus insuring immediate growth of the trees. It is estimated that this preliminary planting will give the trees a two to three year advantage in development over the usual root-stock plantings.

Homebites in this new section are of unusual size. Some are less than 80 feet in width, affording ample opportunity for the designer of the rambling-type suburban home favored by architects of today.

A YOUNG MAN ABOUT DOWN

Admiral Dick Wallace and his first mate, Mr. White had an unfortunate experience last week at Paw Paw. The Admiral took his blue destroyer in the Paw Paw vicinity for some summer maneuvers against the Riggs resistance. All went well until the Admiral rammed a freighter, which he didn't destroy, although the blue destroyer was pretty well mangled.

Nancy Strelinger has the misfortune of Orchard Lake division of the "Swimming and talking Club" just about crazy. She started up at Westwood last week on the muscular and of none other than Bob Arnold, human life insurance policy for the Orchard Lake swimmers, all of which made many a lovely damsel wonder if she hadn't better go to the hair dressers again.

Maybe you might have noticed lately that the Brethins hobnobbing around and about in great agony a week or so ago. Now that the second is healed, it can be said that Missy Barby dropped a good-sized juze filled with lemonade on the big toe, and big toe with juze dropped on them don't make awfully good walking, says Babs.

Don Scriven was a wee bit embarrassed last week at Westwood when a pretty young thing swooped down on him and asked him for his autograph. Don couldn't figure out what was what, but it so happened that the gent in Mr. Barrie's band had on checked coats, white shirts, blue polka dot ties, and gray slacks, and incidentally, so did Don.

Word comes from the front that clothing connoisseurs are anticipating a decline in the popularity of the half-belt model sport suit. The newest type of sport coat is full like the old "swing jacket" with the "swings" only about half as long, and a plain back. Don't take that wrong, though. The half belt will still be a popular model, for this winter, at least.

Marilyn Prussing decided Friday that there would be more and better attractions for the summer in the northlands, so that she went.
