'Hercules' Attempts To Emulate The Starlings

The grim gentleman in the black cape shook a bony finger under the bewhiskered nose of Hercules as melodrama paid a visit to the R. K. White's home, 440 Lake Park drive, Saturday morning.

Hercules is the wire-haired fox terrior that guards the White home from invasion by vicious enemy cats.

When off duty as guardian, however, Hercules is the friendliest of creatures. He has a regular habit of paying a visit to each member of the White family every morning, and his favorite pastime is to crawl out on the sill of Dave White's windows and argue with the early morning Starlings. This act nearly brought about Hercules' undoing.

Saturday morning found Hercules happily barking on top of his young master's bed; then dashing merrily over to the window and crawling out on the sill. David, who was very sleepy and had not noticed his pet's strange exit got up, closed the window, and had breakfast.

An hour or so later a beeping horn summoned Dave to a morning game of golf. The "Hero" was leaving when calls from his sister, Mildred, and some scared squeaks of a puppy dog called him back to the house, where a horrifying sight stopped him in his tracks. There on the roof was Hercules, slowly sliding toward the edge to a thirty foot drop. The puppy's frantic scratching at the slate roof seemed only to push him nearer to his end.

Dave went into action. He broke all records for the hundred as he sped into the house, and up the steps to his room. Looking out the window he saw that already one of Hercules' feet was over the edge of the eaves. His fingers tore at the window. With a tremendous push, Dave flung open the window, leaned far out, grabbed the stubby tail just as it was disappearing, and hauled "Herky" to safety.

Yes, Hercules is through with his stratosphere experiments. From now on there is one Wire Haired Fox Terrier that will hold all discussions with neighboring birds from the ground floor only!

STAR DUST
Movie • Radio
★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

THERE'S nothing like keeping your business all in the family! Gene Markey wrote a scenario, "By the Dawn's Early Light," (and can't you see that title being shortened so that it will fit theater marquees?) and RKO has bought it for his wife, Joan Bennett, which is nice as he wrote it especially for her. Fred Stone will be the other star. It sounds pretty exciting. Stone will play an American consul stationed in China. Joan will be his daughter, and a revolution will furnish the drama. Joan is making a picture in England now, and is eager to get home and begin work in her husband's story.

It rather startled everyone to have Myrna Loy and Arthur Hornblow getting their romantic affairs straightened out at last. There have been rumors of a matrimonial nature about them for a long time. Hornblow and his wife, the lovely Julie Crosby, had separated, but he had been opposed to a divorce. Often while Hollywood gossips were rushing about, saying that it was just too dreadful that his wife wouldn't divorce him so that he and Myrna could be married!) Eventually Mrs. Hornblow went to Reno, and after that it was plain sailing.

Don't refer to Buster Crabbe as Buster any more; he doesn't like it. He got the studio to let him be Larry Crabbe, but they insisted on putting "Buster" in the middle, and now he's known by all three names. He's working in "The Arizona Raiders" for Paramount, with Marsha Hunt.

Warner Brothers and Paul Whiteman have joined forces in an effort to discover talented children. Children from all over the country will appear with Whiteman on his radio broadcasts each week, and be given tests at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio.

Warner Brothers will also make a series of shorts, the casts to be composed entirely of children. And of course any children who make the grade will be under contract to Warner Brothers.

While we're on the subject of children, the settlement of the insurance over little Freddie Bartholemew is good news. Apparently he didn't want to leave his beloved paint, who had done so much to develop his talent and taken such care of him, yet naturally his mother couldn't be denied her rights. His aunt said recently that she was disturbed over the effect the whole thing had had on him; he forgot his lines when he was working, a thing he had never done before, and had told her that, if he was taken away from her, he'd run away and keep running away until he got back to her.

Irene Dunne has been having a grand time in New York. She and her husband were guests the other evening at a small dinner party at which the eldest son of the former king of Spain was also present.

Irene Dunne

The Four Hundred of New York long since took the lovely Irene to its heart, but she is still the same sweet, unspoiled girl that she has always been. The prize for the most "regular" person in pictures certainly ought to go to her.

Mitchell Leisen, Paramount director, could take bows if he cared to over persuading the great Stokowski to breed into the movies. The famous conductor will appear in "The Big Broadcast of 1937," along with a couple of jazz bands —but not all playing at the same time!

ODDS AND ENDS . . . You'll want to see Edward G. Robinson in "Bullets or Ballots"; this time he's against the gangsters instead of being one of them . . . Robert Taylor "broke" down the other day and confessed that his real name is Spangler Arlington Brough . . . Merle Oberon and David Niven would like to get married, but their contracts forbid it . . . Kay Francis wanted to take a vacation in the Far East, but she has to stay home and make another picture, "Mistress of Fashion" . . . W. C. Fields is steadily improving in health, and will be ready to make another picture soon . . . An independent movie producer is trying to get Emperor Haile Selssie to come to Hollywood and make a picture . . . In Australia the censors cut out the burial sequence of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"—and mangled the plot.
