FIFTY-NINTH YEAR—No. 8

WISDOM and THAT

By G. R. A.
Can war ever be prevented? Yes—but, in my opinion, only when economic security is assured the majority of the population...

Some of the "testimonial advertisements" observed in today's newspapers and magazines are, to say the least, suggestive of the "hard sell" for an individual to put into application every good thought he has...

If the New Deal had two more agencies, it would be a more vigorous type of dictator. The only way to avoid greater federal control of our lives is to have economic life for the financial and business leaders of the nation to be honest influence, so that more jobs will become available to more people more of the time...

Birmingham is probably unassuming as a city, but it is in the great number of meetings held for the discussion of numerous topics through the economic and social orders. Scarcely a week passes but what one or two groups get together in voluntary activity to exchange views and ideas...

Without exception, every political party in this country has, from time to time, indulged in the business of giving its own members various public jobs; when used moderately, perhaps there is justification for a portion of the system...
