Thoughts On Attending 'Holiday' Opening 14th Season Of Players

By Marjorie Elaine Porter Arrived early at the Playhouse Friday evening and found every body in "Holiday" mood.

Philip Barry's play "Holiday" just the piece to start the year reflected. Jolly thing, with polkaing lines, but a fine and delicate piece of dramatic mechanism.

Finally, house lights out—and curtain. Mrs. Maude Packer Mack, looking charming in the role of Julia Seaton, addressing a few casual remarks to a sedate butler...

Enter Linda Seaton, Mrs. C. G. Eden to join, with a sea breeze, gay, spontaneous, with a personality like a wind in the dark.

Both girls in love with Johnny and Farrington Holt enter as Johnny Case, Julia's fiancé, and the shuttle of romance begins to weave its bit.

The character of Julia would never seem a possibility, contrasted with an audience. Rather hard role for that reason, Miss Mack is off well today.

Nick Deesove a Hand Warren Perse covers himself with glory as Nick Potter. One thing about this piece, it's remarkably well cast.

Mrs. Henry Hart as the superior Laura Gram, gives an amusing portrayal of an affected climber, whose world is founded on the north, south, east and west by the Social Register.

Delia and Charles, exceedingly efficient servants with whom the homes of millionaires abound.

You know the story—boy meets girl, boy gets girl, boy loses one girl, and just as certain falls girl two in triangle starts after boy, and seeing that girl two is Linda, the audience wishes her luck.

My word is that the last curtain is the show over? All over, but the shouting and the niffing.

Everybody waiting for niffing—"Hot News" by Loren T. Robinson and "Watched 'N' Never Boils" by Mrs. George M. Dwyell.

The last happens to be first with Dr. James Howell as the center of a touching deathbed scene.
