THIS is a yarn that starts with a hurricane, but the hurricane hasn't got much to do with it. It's really a yarn about a bird-dog named Joe, who gave up his life becaise, bird dog though he was, he wasn't above tackling something beside birds when the life of his mistress was in danger.
Frances McCornick of New York City tells this tale, and I'll bet there's a tear in her eye as she writes it. It starts out in September, 1924, the year of the big hurricane in Florida—the one that hasn't got much risician. The place was on a river bank, and there was a special reason why the McCormicks took it. The doctor who owned the place loved to hunt. So did Frances' husband. The doctor had dogs, and his kennels were a fine place to keep the McCormicks' dog, Joe. So the McCormicks moved in and settled down for the season.
