St. Dunstan's Guild Offers Fine Performance Of Original Plays

By Marjorie Elaine Porter

St. Dunstan's Guild spread the magic carpet of imagination and conducted its audience at Brookside auditorium on Friday evening, on a most enjoyable dramatic excursion.

All three of the one-act plays presented were written by members of the Guild, displaying a variety of talent. The grim realism of "Sweet Genevieve," "The Bird in the Guided Cage," and "They Cut Down the Old Pine Tree." William Comstock offered sympathetic support for the singers' art as accompanist. Pompadour, bustle and all, were complete in the costume of Mrs. Hart as assistant, who gave a dramatic rendition of the old-time number, "A Man Was the Cause of It All." Mrs. Robert F. Grindley fulfilled the mission of usher, bringing bouquets which the Smith Brothers lost no time in claiming.

Those who have seen a hangover victim on the verge of his demise the morning-after, chortled with glee at the spectacle of "Mr. Pengwyn," as portrayed by Mr. Bingham in the closing play of the evening, "It's Your Move."

"One of Those Days" was so humorously abject, and his misery, (largely physical) seemed so genuine, that he won the laurels of the evening for realism in his performance. Mrs. Fred C. Pew, as his irate spouse, trying to move with a semi-conscious husband, was very amusing, as was Miss Jessie Witter, as Bertha the maid, who had the misfortune to drop a picture.

It was just "one of those days," and others contributing to the excitement of the plot and the whittling of the audience, were Henry Whit-

The home dressmaker is having a wonderful time this season with the lovely new materials. The piques are favorites for every occasion. Play suits are made of pique, sport clothes and crisp evening gowns are also fashioned of this material. Perhaps the most striking designs are those having a white background, printed in black or vivid colors.

Voiles are very good but not the lifeless voiles of yesterday. These new ones have body to them and stand up under hard wear.

A cunning style is that of having a tailored suit of dainty.

The authors of all three plays are to be congratulated, as well as those taking part. Robert Woodrow maintained his dexterity and independence as the American aviator taken prisoner, through to the end of his performance, in the Towle play. Mrs. C. G. Eden as a woman guard, won the sympathy of the audience in befriending the boy soldier, well portrayed by Mrs. Frederick E. Booth in the same play. Other prizes who played their roles with human appeal, were Mr. Eden, Donald Sanderson, John Morley and Fred C. Pew. Waldemar P. Adams was a relentless captain of the Red Army, and J. Robert P. Swanson equally so, as the pilfering sergeant.

One would scarcely have recognized Templeton Licklider and Linton Hart hiding behind the chin sherry which they were adorned to impersonate Mrs.

My Woof Aches!

QUEER symptoms in my warp, too. And no wonder! That heavyweight janitor nearly beat the life out of me. At the end of the second round, I was so groggy I thought my time had come. And I never will be the same again. I've got sixteen fractures and a lot of bald patches where my fringe used to be. Wait till my Owner sees me! Will she be wild!

Mrs. Owner should have known that janitors — heavy or welterweights — are temperamentally unsuited to the cleaning of carpets or rugs. But she may be one of those penny-wise-pound-foolish ladies! Rugs and carpets should never be beaten. To be really clean, they need to be soap-and-water washed at least once a year.

Nurse Service For Needy Cases Provided By Community House In Many Instances

By CAROL DWELLEY

Competent nurses, ready to assume any sort of case or patient, are available through the Metropolitan/Detroit Visiting Nurse Association. One of these nurses, Miss Leila Richards, comes to the Community House every day, through the Royal Oak branch of the Association. She takes cases at the recommendation of the House.

The nurses' services are paid for through many different channels. Some families are able to pay themselves. Welfare agencies will pay for calls to special cases. The Community House takes care of a good many more, either out of its own funds or with contributions from outside sources. Women's clubs, bulk large in these sources, with private contributions running a close second.

"The roughest winter months and early spring are my busy seasons," said Miss Richards. "Winter induces chest complications, such as pneumonia. But when that can be licked with early recognition and correct care, Spring is the season for scarlet fever, whooping cough and other serious contagious diseases. Babies never seem to mind the seasons, for we always have a plentiful crop of new arrivals on hand."

One of Miss Richards' current cases is a family where first came to the attention of the House at Christmas time. The visitor found a family of seven living in a three room house. There were only two beds, in very shabby condition, and the mother, a woman of what- ever, was the 23 year old mother was expecting her sixth baby.

The House supplied clothes for the older children, who were almost naked. Blankets and towels were given to the mother, and a Christmas basket for the whole family. When the new baby came, Miss Richards was on hand. She nursed the baby, and as pretty as a picture.

The father, now working on a P. W. A. project, says that his family never could have survived without the kindness of the House and the care of the visiting nurse.

Another father had worked for a coal company all winter, only to be laid off with the spring. Miss Richards found the mother and a new baby lying on a miserable board floor, while three other small children huddled together in a corner. Through the efforts of the House, a new bed and mattress were secured. The House is also paying for the necessary medical care, until someone in the family can assume the responsibility.

There is a three year old baby girl in Birmingham, whom Miss Richards says is the image of one of the quintuplets. Her mother works by the day about town to support three children. The baby necessarily accompanies her on her rounds.

One day the child fell and broke her arm. The House sent Miss Richards to care for her. Her brothers had to stay home because they didn't have enough clothes to go to. They are back in school now, wearing clothes supplied by the House. The pain of the broken arm was almost offset for the little sister by the fit of a warm robe and some pretty slippers.
