The Kitchen Korner

By Sally Lunn

"Just look at those nice new aluminum pans! All stained!" Elder Sister faced Young Bride with a note of rebuke.

"So what? Do you think I'm going to ruin my nails and hands scouring pots and pans? And don't try to tell me that my husband will think more of me if I keep all the kettles shined up and have to hide red hands behind my back."

"You don't need to be so hard about it. If you used your head more, you wouldn't need to ruin your hands. Of course, the girls in my crowd take some pride in their homes, even if they aren't nail-polish minded. If you weren't such a smart-aleck, I could tell you how to keep those grand aluminum utensils of yours clean without any trouble. A few years from now, when you've learned the difference between dollars and cents, you'll appreciate what it meant to have everything just handed over to you, and your kitchen outfitted in everything bright and new."

"O. K. darling, give me a load of your domestic genius, and I'll match my kettles against your's any day."

"I'm serious about this. Didn't you ever learn never to boil potatoes or eggs in aluminum? You sauteans black every time. Use enamel for your eggs and potatoes."

"Yes, but that's a big help after you've had your first school girl complexion. What I want to know is, what do I do now?"
