The Science of Compounding Medicines

By The Schettler Drug Co.

A graduate pharmacist—and none other is permitted to fill prescriptions—has devoted years in acquiring a thorough knowledge of chemistry and pharmacy and in the art of skillfully assembling such chemicals and drugs as may be ordered by a physician on a prescription form.

Not one moment of those years of training and study was devoted to the art of diagnosing human ills and prescribing for them—the functions of the physician. And so to ask the pharmacist to prescribe for you is to ask him to be remiss in his duty. When your health appears impaired, see your doctor. If he prescribes for you, take the prescription to the druggist in whom you have the most confidence.

All Races Join to Fight Disease

Among those engaged in acquiring medical knowledge and procuring and preparing the drugs required to make it effective, there is no need for any treaty or alliance. Men and women of every race and creed join to fight disease. Drugs on our shelves represent years of labor and scientific research in discovering their use. Our part is to compound them correctly, as your doctor prescribes, to heal sickness and relieve pain.
