MUSICALE OFFERS 'TALENTED FAMILY'

Members To Stage Novel Program With Play By Mrs. Reilly

As an innovation in its program plan, the Birmingham Musicale will present a playlet entitled "The Talented Family," by Mrs. James J. Reilly, Jr., Thursday, Feb. 11, at the Community House at 2:30 p. m.

The play will be staged under the direction of Mrs. Reilly, a member of the Musicale, and Mrs. George Turner. The musical members of the "Talented Family" will include Miss Helen Atkins and Mrs. Ruth Frazier Sutton, violinists; Mrs. H. Victor Spike, who will sing a vocal solo, and Mrs. Margaret Neff Glenn, accompanist. Members of the cast will appear in costumes of the Colonial period.

In addition to the music, there will be Russian, tap and ballet dances by Genevieve Gay, Jean Huffman, Dennis Franklin, Patsy Frazier and Rita Stetson.

Mrs. Bessie M. McMechan is general chairman of arrangements for the Orpheus Club concert, which the Musicale is sponsoring, and which will be an event of Feb. 23, at the Community House. The Orpheus Club has achieved a national reputation for its outstanding choral work. Charles Frederic Morse is the director.

Mrs. H. H. Gardner and Mrs. Raymond White are co-chairmen of the ticket committee. Tickets may be secured also at the McNellis Jewelry store on West Main avenue.

The Kitchen Korner

By Sally Lunn

The old Woman-Who-Lived-in-the-Shoe tied the crisp strings of a fresh apron around her waist, and picked up her broom.

"Now you children clear right out of my kitchen, or else," she warned belligerently, flourishing her broom above the heads of a score of small, peering offspring. "We want to eat, we want dessert," they protested in chorus. "We're tired of broth without any bread for our supper. We want something sweet to finish off the meal."

The Old Woman-Who-Lived-in-the-Shoe faced them with her hands on her hips, and her foot tapping the floor in a menacing manner.

"Oh! you do! Do you? Suppose we just dig up the sugar-plum tree and get it to grow right here in our own backyards!"

"Where is it? Where is it?" cried the children, jumping for joy at the thought. "We'll go get it, if you'll tell us where it grows."

"Simulations! There's no such thing. Desserts cost money. How do you think a body's going to feed a family like mine, if she doesn't eat some corn?"

Indeed! You should be thankful to have good, nourishing broth for your supper. Now, seat all of you."

Outside the worn, old shoe, which was her home, the children held a council-of-war.

"Let's go live with the Queen of Hearts, she bakes tarts every day," one suggested.

"I have a better idea," another exclaimed. "Let's go tell Mother Goose. She is so wise, and will know just what to do."

Mother Goose came quickly to the door when her great brass knocker sounded with a thud against the panel.

"Why, bless my soul!" she exclaimed. "What are all of you doing so far away from your shoe? Does your mother know where you are?"

"We came to tell you our troubles, Mother Goose," said one of the older girls, drying her eyes on her gingham apron.

"Troubles? Do children have real troubles?" asked Mother Goose, patting the little girl on the head. "Well, anyway, come right in and tell me everything."

The girls told her how, like all children, they craved little sweets now and then, but that broth without any bread, was all their mother ever gave them.

"Why, of course, you want dessert. Your shoe all star for lunch with me. Then I shall go home with you and talk things over with your mother."

And there was dessert for luncheon, just the kind of simple, wholesome, inexpensive dessert that a wise Mother Goose would think of. Here's how she made it.

Taking strips of buttered bread, she placed them in a baking dish, and covered them with a layer of apple sauce. Then more bread, and more apple sauce, until she had filled the dish. Finally, she placed it in the oven to brown.

When she served it with cream for dessert, the children greeted it with a shout of delight.

"But I tell you, you're wrong. The Old Woman-Who-Lived-in-the-Shoe stood together, broom and children, and they were wrong."

Children need carbohydrates in their diet," Mother Goose declared heatedly. "Now, you take a simple dessert like the one I gave them this noon. They loved it, and it was inexpensive and easy to make. Here's the recipe all written out."

The Old Woman-Who-Lived-in-the-Shoe relented.

"Well, I guess you are right. I thought all desserts were rich and expensive, but I guess if I'd used my head, I could have figured out something like this. And, Mother Goose, if you know any more good recipes, please send them over."

The Old Woman-Who-Lived-in-the-Shoe relented.
