STORY OF PUPPET TOLD BY AUTHOR

Mrs. Brandt Opens Home For January Meeting Of A. A. U. W.

The rise of the grotesque little puppet to the plane of artistry, since its arrival in this country from the Old World, was recounted in a fascinating talk on puppetry by Paul McPharlin, national authority, before members of the Birmingham Branch of the American Association of University Women, Wednesday afternoon at a meeting at the home of Mrs. Arthur J. Brandt of Kenness drive.

Mr. McPharlin related how puppetry made its debut in the United States, and rose to its present height as one of the allied arts of the theater. He told of the experiences of leading producers of puppet shows. Much of the originality of puppet productions is due to the fact that each company uses a different style of art in the making and costuming of the characters, and scenic design, Mr. McPharlin pointed out.

Mr. McPharlin, who resides on Winton road, had received national recognition in his art. He was the first to call a conference on puppetry in Detroit in 1926, and is the publisher of a year book entitled, "The Year Book of Marionettes." ## Vows Are Spoken At Afternoon Ceremony In Pilgrim Chapel

Tall candelabra burning tapers lighted the chancel of Pilgrim Chapel of the North Woodward Congregational church Saturday afternoon for the wedding of Betty Callender, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Callender of Elmhurst avenue, and Earl A. Maxwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Maxwell of Henrietta street. The chancel was banked with palms, interspersed with tall standards of white gladioli and caryanthemums.

The nuptial service was read by Dr. Charles Haven Myers at 4:30 o'clock.

The bridal gown of ivory lace, was fashioned on graceful pattern of lace, with a square décolletage. The quaint sleeves were puffed high at the shoulder, like taping off, with points at the wrists. A Queen Anne collar of the same lace, and a medallion of the same lace, were worn with the gown.

A half of lace secured the veil of ivory tulle, which fell over the face to the waist, and extended below the long train of the gown. The bridal bouquet was of calla lilies tied with white satin ribbon.

Ruby Elizabeth Callender, who was her sister's only attendant, wore a gown of dusty pink crepe, made with a fitted jacket trimmed with white satin. A standing collar and wide revers distinguished the bodice, and the skirt was full, gathered in back at the hem. A veil of bronze tulle, fastened to her head by a filigree sweetheart bow, was worn by Miss Callender, who carried an arm bouquet of pink roses tied with bronze ribbon.

John Roger Brown assisted Mr. Maxwell as best man, and seating the guests were Arthur H. Ott and Thomas A. Neal.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents.

Mrs. Callender's gown was of rust crepe with bodice and sleeves of matching net, with accessories of the same shade. She wore a corsage of green orchids. Mrs. Maxwell wore green orchids. Mrs. Maxwell wore green orchids. Mrs. Maxwell wore green orchids.
