TEA WILL HONOR FAMOUS GUESTS

Birmingham Women To Be In Receiving Line At Afternoon Affair

Mrs. Charles J. Shain and Mrs. Fred D. Farrar, of Birmingham will be on the reception committee at a tea to be given Thursday, Jan. 21, at the home of Mrs. Clarence Bruce of West Lawrence avenue in Pontiac from 2 to 5 o'clock, in honor of Kirby Pace, student of international relations, and Charles Alfred Coulson, a Fellow at Trinity College, Cambridge University.

The tea will be held under auspices of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and will be open to the public. Mrs. Pace and Mr. Coulson will be speakers at a civic meeting to be held the same evening in the Pontiac High School Auditorium at 8 o'clock. The former will discuss the turmoil in Europe, and the latter will give some insight into the reaction of Great Britain on current trends in international relations.

A local committee interested in the event includes Mrs. J. N. Hudjaky, Mrs. John Gaffly, Mrs. George D. Hendrie and Miss Jilja Van Arsdell.

The Kitchen Korner

By Sally Lunn

"If I have to see one more cranberry!" Grace Ellen turned with a frown of disgust from a bag on the table from which rolled several of this thingy-raised-colored balls.

"Well, why did you buy them?" her mother questioned, "I wondered about that when you ordered them from the store. You never seemed to care for them at home."

"Oh, it's Jim," Grace Ellen exclaimed wearily. "He thinks he can't live without them, wants them almost every meal. I am so sick of them that I can hardly be civil about it any more. I told him last night it was pure selfishness on his part. I told him I was simply fed up on eating, cooking and even looking at cranberries!"

Then Jim said he guessed if he couldn't get what he wanted to eat at home, there were plenty of restaurants where he could! A few more words, and we were really angry at each other, and all over cranberries."

"How perfectly childish!" Grace Ellen's mother learned from the sink where she had been peeling potatoes, and fixed her daughter, peering slowly through her glasses. "To think that two intelligent adults like you and James would allow a trivial thing like cranberries to cause a quarrel! With all the big problems young married people have to cope with now-a-days, you and James find time to make an issue out of cranberry sauce? It's almost funny!"

"Well, it's getting on my nerves!" I'm tired of buying and putting the same thing on the table practically every day, and just to please the whim of a stubborn man."

"Pleasing the whims of your man, my dear, is part of your marriage contract. If you are going to let a silly thing like this rattle in your mind, I think the sacrifice is on your side of the ledger. Why not make an effort to find new recipes, new ways of serving cranberries, that you will enjoy too?"

"I've done everything but fry them."

"I know one," Grace Ellen's mother emptied the bag of cranberries into a pan of cold water and began sorting them as she talked.

"Now, Grace Ellen, if you are so cranberry-conscious that you can't tackle this job, I'll do it myself. Where's that paring knife?" Oh, here it is. Now I'll just take these good firm berries, cut them in half, and let them stand a little while in sugar, while I mix my pudding batter. Any simple batter will do. Even a one-egg cake recipe, that's what I use now. I dice my cranberries lightly with flour, and into the batter they go, a few sets time, of course, so they won't sink to the bottom. Beat them up well. Turn into a greased cake tin, and bake just as you would a one-egg cake.

"When that's done, you'll have one of the most delicious puddings you ever tasted. We'll serve it tonight as a dessert with vanilla sauce, and you won't know whether you're eating cranberries or cherries!"

Grace Ellen stowed meekly, watching her mother's swift, experienced fingers. "You make me feel like a spoiled ten-year-old. Mother," she admitted.

"Never mind. When a girl's first married, the out-of-time looks at her troubles through a magnifying glass. Of course, there will be rather important things coming up in your married life that you can't agree on, but a little matter of five James what he eats at the table, should be a simple problem."

"Don't cook foods the same way all the time. Make a business of hunting new recipes for the things you both like. Collect so many different ones as you can, then paste them in a scrap book, or write them on a card file. Keep adding to them. Tonight, for instance, instead of an argument for dinner, there'll be cranberry pudding."

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—
John B. Taylor, of Madison avenue: "Just a little more than three months and the trout season will open in Michigan. Boy, what a lot of big ones I'm going after next summer."

Boy Soprano

Jackie Ross, 12 year old boy soprano, who will sing at the 4 o'clock vesper services at Christ Church Cathedral, Sunday, Jackie has given command performances before the late King George V and has sung for the former King Edward VIII. He has sung in Choirs of England and Wales from his very early days, for his remarkable voice has won him recognition throughout the British Isles.

The performance of Jackie has been substituted for the organ recital by Charles L. Wuerth previously scheduled for this date.

150 CHILDREN AT OPENING OF CLUB

'Sing' Follows Registration In Hobby Groups For Initial Meeting

With an initial attendance of 150 boys and girls between the ages of eight and ten years, the Saturday Club, opened at the Community House, Jan. 9.

The Club, sponsored by the Birmingham Branch of the American Association of University Women, offers opportunity for children to select a hobby and pursue it with others interested in the same thing, under supervision of volunteer workers. After registration in the various hobby groups, the remainder of the opening meeting was devoted to a "sing" in the auditorium, for which Mrs. Henry G. Roosevelt played the accompaniment.

Dr. E. E. Hammonds will again be in charge of health inspection for the club this year. Other additions to the staff announced by Mrs. Franklin Prickett, general chairman, include Jean Anne Heimiller, Jane Holt, Harry Mack and Nancy Reinhart, who will give instruction in puppetry.

Beginning Saturday, Jan. 16, classes in the wood and metal division will be held from 1:30 to 2:30, followed by half an hour of recreation in the auditorium. Children attending Barnum and Quaker School, who wish to take wood and metal work, are asked to be present at 1:30. Those attending Pierce, Adams, Holy Name, Vaughn and Brookside Schools, are asked to come at 2:30 for recreation, and take the class work from 3 to 4 o'clock.
