By E. G. Whitney The Oakland County Engineering Society is composed of some mighty fine fellows even if their president is "all wet." Let me tell you a little bit about I. C. Beers, of Royal Oak, who heads the group.

Not so long ago the society decided to do something worthwhile for a number of years so they offered to build a bridge across the ravine that separates the tent and the clubhouse at Camp Mahn-Goo-Tah-Soo, Oakland County Y.M.C.A. camp for boys at Loon Lake, near Hale.

After the engineers worked on the plans for a while they gave up and hired an engineer to design the bridge for them, so I'm told. Anyway, everything went along fine and the ravine was spanned in short order, much to the credit of the society doing all the work with the aid of 15 or 16 members of civic clubs in the county.

A few minutes later the shore watchers were horrified to see the engineers' canoe (turt and spill its three occupants into the cold water. Goodspeed and Haller managed to bring the boat, shore Beers made and got back to land. When the story about the incident, Beers gruffly remarked that he had attempted to work out a problem relative to the stability of frail craft but that the theory was no more than a theory.

The seven engineers returned home Sunday afternoon after a delightful time. However, little was said about the canoe trip.

When the dinner and speeches were concluded Roy Goodspeed, city engineer and assistant of Beers, and Al Haller, of the Ferrisville engineering department, suggested to Beers that the three of them take a canoe trip on the lake. Beers was delighted at the suggestion.

By Marjorie Elaine Porter Calling all brides, calling all brides. The June contingent is about due from Niagara Falls and Bermuda, and is also due for plenty of advice. After they get to, they'll probably forget it, which in some cases will be just as well.

But having conducted through our Marital Research Bureau, an extensive survey on the principal cause belli among newly-marrieds, we feel a matter of civility duty to let you know in advance how to identify symptoms of the more common chronic types, nevertheless, we assume they should be smarter in avoiding trouble.

Accordingly we will give absolutely free to you, to city or booklets to mail the result of the survey, first hand. To this end, we have compiled a brief resume of things which do NOT do in the interest of peace on earth and the good will of her man.

But because research has further revealed that negative advice merely dents the forehead, we offer these in positive and (necessarily) ironical form. Hence—if you are a bride wishing to make a good start, be sure to:

1.—Play bridge all afternoon so dinner will be late. Try to time yourself to get home just as your husband arrives. Or better still, later. Let him come home to find you and no prospect of an evening meal.

2.—All through dinner, tell him your troubles, whether real or imaginary. Surely you can think of a dozen things or so that bothered you during the day. Remember, he had a full stomach and leisurely dinner. Don't let him enjoy the meal. Remember he's a big, strong man with broad shoulders of weep on to go right ahead and weep.

3.—After dinner, while he's listening to his favorite news broadcast, go to the radio and fuss with the dial. Turn it around until you get a good, agreeable program. If he happens to choose fine, keep tuned right in. It helps too, if you hum the same air in a different key.

4.—Be severely critical of your husband's friends. Find fault particularly with his favorite pals.

5.—Don't allow him an inch in the house in which to put his things, and don't walk about, suggesting that some of them in the house should be arranged. Remember it's your home—all he does is pay the bills.

6.—Show little or no sympathy for his hobbies. Obvert every time he wants to play golf, tennis, ride horseback or go fishing.

7.—If he thinks as a married man he can go on living his own life, let him understand he's decidedly mistaken. That was all right for a bachelor, but now, he's your husband. Start right in to "make him over" according to the model-husband-pattern you picked out for him before you were married.

Next week our Marital Research Bureau will tell you more how to be popular (at home) after marriage.

By Carol Dweilley Did you ever hear Rudy Vallee's program last Thursday? One of his guest artists was the gravel-throated Dr. Rockwell, whose voice is a mixture of the voices of Fred Allen and Gene Spinks, combining the most startling features of each. The Doc spent most of his time trying to argue people into accepting his invitations to spend their vacations with him in Boothbay Harbor, Maine, his summer home.

Now, Boothbay is to Southport, where I've spent 18 out of my 21 summers, like the four corners is to the farm. We have a post office and a bank, and that's all commercially, if one excepts a creaking draw-bridge. The Harbor is where the "farmers" (summer visitors, dry-dockers, ship-shandlery, library and the yacht club, all the boat, leave from the Harbor, and the lures from Wisconsin, proud owner of the nearest railroad, occasionally drop in. All in all, it's quite a place, and we'll see that Dr. Rockwell is plenty wishful not to let other people know about it.

The Doctor is an institution in the Harbor—one of the few farmers who are friends with his own kind and his townpeople alike. Even if you don't hear his fog-horn voice to warn you that he's coming, it's still easy to recognize him. A huge, ferocious, red-shirted, biggest teeth you'll probably ever see. At first you're rattled—then, behind the smoke, a mahogany colored that we washed he'd play in Detroit again. He leaped like a startled fawn, even removing the pipe to reply.

"Are you from Detroit, sister? Well keep it dark and I'll never tell your secret. Good-a-mighty, I played in that city once and before I'd been on the stage two minutes I'd earned near had children from the reception the audience gave me. Brrr!" And he made noise like an outboard motor, and blew on his hands.

Richard Matthews Hallett, whose stories appear regularly in the Post, is another Harbor-dweller, only he lives there all year round. Once, like the genuine one, he came once to call on me because he and my father had been members of the same class in college. He was delighted to learn that our house was perched on the edge of a cliff, and promptly christened it the "Cliff-Dwellers." It sent us into insane raptures to read, during the following winter, a sheet autobiography he had written to accompany one of his stories. It followed the conventional lines, even listing his clubs at the end. Harvard Club? No indeed. Not even the Red and Red would do for Mr. Hallett. Shining at the end of his autobiography were these lone, these perfect, words: "Clubs: Boothbay Harbor Fire Department (convivial)."
