The Kitchen Korner

By Sally Lann

The family decided to go on a picnic today, and the picnic was a success. The family decided to go on a picnic today, and the picnic was a success. The family decided to go on a picnic today, and the picnic was a success.

Here she was again, another impromptu picnic, and nothing on hand. It was easy enough to obtain food at the 11th hour, but what took time was gassing and putting in the necessary appointments to make the picnic comfortable.

She had always intended setting aside a picnic shelf in her cupboard. Sometimes, waking in the wee small hours, she would awake herself by planning exactly what she would have on the shelf. But when morning came there would be so many household tasks needing immediate attention, that arranging the picnic shelf would be postponed.

What! No Plates! Now she was trying to assemble things—waxed paper, paper plates and cups. Goodness! Did they use paper plates of their last picnic? She should have replaced them. Where? O where was the can opener—the one to open oysters and pickles! What had Sonny done with the vacuum bottle?

She was dashing her skillet looking for things to pack with when her husband came into the kitchen.

"Will you hop in the car and drive some paper plates, I'm all out, and we have only three paper cups," she asked him in the midst of hurried preparations.

"Oh, why bother with that junk now? Just get some food together, and let's go."

"Well, how do you think we're going to eat without anything to serve the food with?"

"There's a swell time to think about that. Why in blazes don't you get plates and stuff when you buy groceries and have them in the house? It's a quarter to five now. By the time you get through your junk, ribbits around sandviches, it'll be after six. Stop fussing. All the kids and I care about is plenty of food."

After two trips back into the house for forgotten parts of the lunch, they finally got away. With Father muttering to his pipe, and Mother ready to blow up with nerves.

Darning Be Darned!

The next morning, with resolute chin, Mother put aside ironing, darning and other chores to arrange her picnic shelf. She ordered a new supply of waxed paper, paper plates and paper napkins. She collected a variety of screw top jars of different sizes, and placed them on the shelf. A gay cloth spread to lay on picnic table or ground, an opener for cans and bottles, the vacuum food container, and vacuum bottle, were added to the shelf.

"As long as I've done this much, I might as well make the outfit complete," Mother decided. On her next shopping trip she purchased additional equipment including aluminum salt and pepper shakers, enameled drinking cups and nicked knives, forks and spoons, all wrapped in the waxed paper.

There was no delay on the next picnic. With everything shipshape, Mother had only to concentrate on the feast itself.

YOUNG VIOLINIST HEARD IN CONCERT

15-Year Old Artist Gives Fine Performance In First Recital Here

Music-lovers gathered at the Community House Monday evening to hear a recital by Charles Turner, talented young violinist, who appeared under auspices of the Birmingham Musicale. Mr. Turner was assisted by Syver Thinsstad, baritone and William Graefing King, violinist. Mrs. Martha B. King accompanied Mr. Turner, and Mrs. Arthur J. Bearby was accompanist for Mr. Thinsstad.

The concert was well attended, with many belonging to musical groups in neighboring communities, noted in the audience. Turner, who is a youth of 15, gave a remarkable performance, which would do credit to an artist far beyond his years. He possesses the poise, technique and interpretive powers of a seasoned musician.

Mr. Thinsstad's rich baritone voice is familiar to many in Birmingham. His choice of selections was most fortunate in bringing out the full, round tones and displaying his powers of expression. The program concluded with two Rondo Capriccioso, Op. 28, by Saint-Saens, and the Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor by Bach, played by Charles Turner and Mr. King.
