

Record Time

By Carol Dwyler

So now we come to THE record, not only of the week but probably as much of a classic for its division as "Gone With the Wind" for literature. Sells have it at the moment of writing, and can get it for you if their present supply runs out, which it probably will.

Victor publishes it, Lorenz Hart and Richard Rodgers wrote it, and they call it "All Points West." You may have heard Rudy Vallee sing it, but his version sounds as inferior when compared to this one as mine would compared to his. Paul Whiteman, accompanies the singer and narrator, whose name is Bob Lawrence, and who has a smooth, continuous narrative, with no disjointedness. It'll grip you from the first syllable, keep you on edge until you come out of it long enough to change sides of the record.

Rodgers and Hart have, as usual, written a successful piece. Towards the end, when Lawrence gasps "Oh you fool—why me!" I'll make your skin crawl, without being maudlin or overdone. But I shan't spoil it for those who haven't heard it by giving away any more of the plot. For goodness' sake though, you collectors of Americans on discs, don't pass this one up; it's as significant of a new medium of expression as the first swing record was.

Frankly, to go on and review the new Ellington, Dorsey and Waller tunes after hearing "All Points West" would make me a bit ill right now. That's how good it is—good enough to completely muzzle a rabid swing fan, who can only pay it the highest compliment in her power, by dedicating a whole column to it, and praying that you and you will take some advice and go listen to it at once. And if you loathed this columnar, blame it on me not the record, and go listen to it anyway. Please?

TO BLAST PEAK
Salt Lake City, Utah—In order to reduce the risk of other fatal airplane accidents, like that on December 13 which took the lives of seven persons, it has been decided to blast the tip of Lone Peak, lofty outcropping of the Wasatch Range, against which the transport liner crashed into the valley.

"STEWED PIGEONS" TO NEEDY
Berlin—In order to get rid of the thousands of pigeons which have been a damaging property, authorities have ordered that for alcohol-soaked peas, caught and given to the needy of Berlin.
