

COMMISSION REJECTS SECOND REZONE PROPOSAL

His remarks were greeted with applause from the delegation of property owners.

Questions Open Debate "Can this go on indefinitely?" Mrs. Woolfenden asked the Commission.

"The Commission has to hear reasonable requests," Mayor Martz replied.

"This is a city for homes not apartments," Mrs. Kane declared.

"I don't see how we can have a double row of dwellings on a 200-foot lot," Mrs. Woolfenden inquired.

Mr. Packard replied that the Commission "must allow the owner a reasonable use of his property," and the Commission felt "diverted" had been done to Mr. Leland.

"I have noted with alarm a tendency to grant almost any request asked," Mr. Muehlman said.

"I don't deal with, even if it was his own fault, but isn't it better to step on Mr. Leland's toes than to step on 40 or 50 others?" If this request is granted to Mr. Leland, why should not others make the same claim?

"I don't tell you what benefit," Mr. Packard replied, "the benefit of $250,000 in assessed taxes."

Commissioner Moody, who had been examining the blue-prints submitted, interrupted proceedings to inform the Commission that he was examining the blue-prints.

Mr. Colgrove raised the question as to how Birmingham could acquire the City's land without additional facilities.

"I don't like the word 'belonging,'" Commissioner Hulbert sternly informed the speaker.

"I am not an abutting property owner," Mrs. Spinning told the Commission.

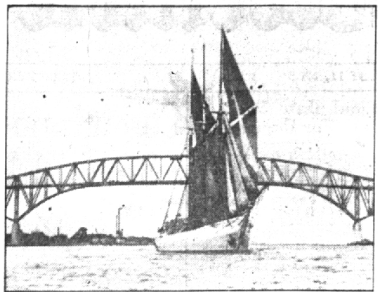

"This AND THAT" and you can't fix it, you'll have to leave it there until either you learn how to get it going, or someone comes along who does know what ails it.
