"Mind" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science churches throughout the world on Sunday, August 21.

The Golden Text (Job 36:5,): is "Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any: he is mighty in strength and wisdom."

Among the Bible citations is this passage (Rom. 11:33a): "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

Corrective passages to be read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 275): "Divine metaphysics, as revealed to spiritual understanding, shows clearly that all is Mind, and that Mind is God, omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience,—that is, all power, all presence, all Science. Hence all is in reality the manifestation of Mind."

TWO IN ONE

By Marjorie Elaine Porter

The market was crowded with Saturday morning shoppers. Clerks bustled here and there waiting on the customers, who consisted for the most part of Birmingham housewives, stocking up for the week-end.

Miss Porter

Suddenly a petulant feminine voice was raised in complaint, "Isn't somebody going to wait on me?"

"We'll get around to you in just a minute, Madam," the proprietor politely and pleasantly informed her.

"I've been waiting too many minutes, that's just the trouble," she complained.

"It won't be long now," the proprietor assured, as he continued waiting on the next customer in turn.

But the petulant one would not be put off. She pushed her way through the crowd and elbowed in to the counter.

"How much are tomatoes?" she queried.

"Hothouse or home-grown?"

"Well, are the home-grown really nice?" ignoring the customer who was being served.

"You can look at them, Madam."

"Those over there? Are those the best you have?"

"Be with you in just a minute, Madam," smilingly assured the proprietor, "Sorry, but how did you say you wanted your coffee ground, Mrs. S - -?"

"For perco - - -"

"I asked you if those tomatoes are the best you have," haughtily interrupted the intruder.

"For the home-grown, yes. The hot-house are in the next basket—Roll or brick butter, Mrs. S - -?"

The petulant one began to reconnoiter around the store, pushing her way between other shoppers, to return shortly with several tomatoes and a cantaloupe.

"These tomatoes aren't nearly as nice as the ones I saw across the street, but I'm in a hurry. Is this melon ripe?" handing it across the counter.

Mrs. S - - -, who had borne patiently with the other interruptions, gave the intruder a frankly stony stare. But it made no impression.

"Is it ripe enough for tomorrow—tomorrow morning's breakfast? We use melons now, we got so tired of orange juice - - - if that's all right I'll take it. The melon and the tomatoes, that's all I want and I'm in such a rush — how much? Here," forcing a $10 bill into the proprietor's hand.

"Is that the smallest you have?"

"Can't you change it?"

"Yes, but it would take most of my change, and I haven't time to send out for more right now."

"Wait 'till I see," rumaging through her handbag. She finally produced a quarter.

"One penny more and you'll make it."

Another hunt through the purse.

"I thought I saw a penny down here somewhere—Here it is, but I don't see why you couldn't have changed my bill for me."

The proprietor handed her the bags containing melon and tomatoes apparently eager to get the business over with.

"Just a minute—did you say these tomatoes are hothouse or home-grown?"

The proprietor opened the bag and looked, "These are home-grown."

"Oh dear! I must have picked up the wrong ones, I wanted hothouse. Will you change them, please, and don't I get some money back?"

This fortune-telling business is shamefully neglected. The field ought to be simply jammed with mystics, instead of leaving it all to the sparse few—inconvenient persons who insist on appointments being made at least a week in advance and who live in the most out-of-the-way locations.

Miss Dwelley

In case any ambitious soul would like to name his own price to as many clients as he can handle, the procedure is really quite simple. Equip your home with whatever you're going to tell fortunes with and just wait. The rush will begin almost any minute.

When your client first enters, regard her balefully and in silence for several minutes. She'll be so much impressed that she'll start to ooze out of the room. That's your cue to go into action. Smirk and say "Aaaah - - -" This gives her the impression that SHE is a REAL person.

Strengthen this impression by grabbing her hand or the tea cup or the cards or the crystal and muttering: "There is so much here that it is hard to sort out the truth. Yours is an exciting and complex character."

After a brief huddle with your false whiskers, say: "You are many persons in one. You feel everything intensely. Perhaps your nature is a little too tender, because some persons impose on you and hinder your success." She'll nod in complete agreement. You can almost HEAR her mind working as she remembers that "Home Sweet Home" always makes her cry and that the boss says he often wonders WHY so many people take her out to lunch and keep her until ALL HOURS. Soon she'll be prattling as though she'd never promised herself not to give anything away.

"What do you do it?" she'll gasp. "All my friends say I'm too tender-hearted and as for Hector—that's the boy I'm engaged to - - -."

Of course you just knew Hector or someone was in the background, but as soon as you are sure, silence her with a frown. She's a baby-blonde, so it's ten to one that Hector is big and dark —just the type for her. You speak.

"Tell the truth. There are many men in your life, but isn't one of your closest friends big and dark?" You need hardly wait for her nod before going on. "I knew it. His path is close to yours and you see him a lot. But there are complications in his way I think."

(This, too, is easy to deduce, since she's just the type to be told that Hollywood is starving for people like her.) "I see that you are of a different mental plane than he. He is smart in a business sense and is a fine young man, but the higher things of life call to you. You have a natural talent along artistic lines, and you consider whether it would be better to ruin the life of this young man or to accept him and give up your career."

By this time you probably have her open-mouthed and groggy. Things look pretty black for poor old Hector and after all, you're not in the business to break things up. So you change your tack by re-shuffling the cards or scanning her other hand or giving the crystal a swipe with a cloth or jiggling the tea leaves around.

"I'm very much relieved," you tell her. "This final verdict shows that you come definitely under the scope of Whamdoodle, the sand flea. We students of the occult realize that Whamdoodle subjects rule their lives by their hearts, not coldly, with their heads. It is written that you will make a great sacrifice and be happy forever after, although the world will be the loser for it."

And, having collected her fee, you send her solemnly forth to the arms of the unsuspecting Hector. She'll tell all her friends that she's discovered a simply wonderful person who can read people like a BOOK and if they want, she'll be glad to introduce them to this mental marvel because she could instinctively TELL that she made more of an impression than the average customer. Your fortune is made.

WHO WROTE IT?

"Lindy Lou"

By J. R. F.

MUSIC was in the soul of the southern child who was to become a creator of "popular" and symphonic music.

At the age of four, she tried to play the piano. At ten she was improvising and composing. By sixteen her first songs were published, and not many years later she was married.

Her husband's work called him to the West to India, China, Burma and Japan and she wandered with him. Everywhere the music of her surroundings was interpreted by her as in "Songs of India," "Saharan Silhouettes," "Songs From The High Hills," "Two Shawnee Indian Dances," etc. Her compositions attracted attention, and she became a member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, which protects the performing rights of her works as well as that of thousands of other composers and authors throughout the world.

She was born in Anderson, S. C., granddaughter of Judge Reed.
