

CAPTAIN

bundled up in a heavy overcoat, a trinity dressed friend, all ready to show you how they can take it. And boy, it was cold at six a. m. Saturday morning, you who were out can well believe that.

More men were coming in, some older Goodfellows, but all full of pep and fire, one and all thinking of the kids and a toy.

You know, folks, as I look at these many men, I can't help thinking we have a wonderful community. You just can't down such a spirit, for when men will stand on street corners for hours, trying to sell newspapers, in the coldest wettest kind of weather, to help others, we still have the greatest that America is and was noted for.

The firemen, policemen and veterans came in large numbers, stayed long and brought in so many nickles and dimes, that the headquarters committee was far behind in their counting and checking. No wonder Rice Howell and Ray Palmer think we should print nothing but paper money.

The Top Man

Did you see that chap at the corner of Woodward and Maple hunting jacket, high leather boots, red cap on his head and three feathers jauntily flying in the breeze, as much as to say "try and not give me something." And did our husky Goodfellow work all day long, just a few moments for lunch and out again, a bear for punishment and could he take it. You have guessed it, it was Maurice Lowman. Maurice was high man for the day, collecting over $45.

Oh, I could name so many like him, policemen, veterans, firemen, civilians, all fighting and battling for the kids and the less fortunate. I guess I saw few drowsy and I guess I saw few money on the tables at headquarters that I will be in a whirl for a week.

It must have been about two p. m. when Ralph Mouthrop, Howard Wendorph and myself started on our round of visits to the business offices. Now that is a job! As you know, they have already given, not once, but many times, so we knew we must have something besides our good looks.

Three old rifles, one a hundred years old (loaned by Mrs. Taylor, the antique dealer), two others a trifle less in age, were our persuaders. We must have been very merry night, three Goodfellows with three old guns, and we trying to hold up our good friends the merchants.

Generous Merchants

Well! Anyway, George Averill, as usual, was our first objective and sure enough, after having our picture taken defending the cash register, (of course we had our nice check by then) we sure showed we wanted to protect our Goodfellow friends, (after we got out.)

Then with a steady step, with rifles on our shoulders, we marched on our way. As usual, Howard Wendorph would get out of step, and I couldn't understand it, as we had visited Bill Maloney yet, but out of step he insisted on being.

After holding up John McKee and looting the cash register, we escaped to Howard Holah's kindergarten, but he saw us coming and turned himself into a small Santa Claus, sort of Charlie McCarthy affair and no persuasion on our part would coax him out. He just tantalized us with nasty quips, so we waited and finally I told him my Kentucky tale had departed and he could come out. I failed to say though, they had departed to watch his office door. He paid and twice for keeping us waiting.

A Successful Drive

Charles Winingham was picked off at thirty pieces, and dropped (a check) without a struggle. But Bob McClelland sure was tough. He said the old guns wouldn't fire and if they did they would take a chance in front of them if we were in back. Guess there was something in that.

Harry McBride, Elmer Houston and Lester Slusser are in the hardware business so they know what a gun in the hands of three must-haves is. They mean, but being hard headed business men, they put up quite a battle. It was too cold, though, and now the Birmingham folks will see a rise in hardware prices. Thanks for some good checks, Goodfellows!

You know, we even tagged a large size greenback (something like a razor-back) on the outskirts of Joe Torrence's ranch.

Well! folks, I guess I have rambled on long enough, but I do wish I could have more time and tell you more about the great est bunch of Goodfellows in all Michigan, but I'll just say the Goodfellows have an honor roll, one and all of them an honor to any community, so God bless them, may they stay on so happy as the kiddies they have helped.
