SURVEY FOCUSES UPON TEACHERS AT HILLS SCHOOL

Teachers at the Bloomfield Hills School have an average age of 31 years, a recently completed survey, dealing with the mental and personal lives of the 12 faculty members at the school, reveals.

That interesting person, the "average" teacher has had four years teaching experience in other schools and has spent three years teaching at the Hills' school, the survey disclosed.

The "average" teacher has travelled in 11 states of the Union. Several of the Hills faculty have also travelled and studied abroad. The average teacher at the Hills school has been a student at two colleges or universities and has a bachelor of arts degree. Only two members of the faculty do not hold college degrees, according to the survey. Two teachers have both bachelor and master degrees.

Among the colleges and universities attended by the Hills' staff are Harvard, Purdue, Oberlin, Cornell, the University of Michigan, Marquette College, the University of Wisconsin and John Hopkins.

Vocational activities of the faculty members, in addition to their teaching have included farming, clerical work, camp counseling, home promotion, the ministry, commercial art, and unskilled labor, the survey shows.

Six of the teachers are natives of Michigan, according to the survey, while one was born in Kent County, England. Faculty mem- bers have attended preparatory schools as far west as Oklahoma and as far east as Massachusetts, the survey disclosed.
