8 simple rules

prescribe your own home lighting by following these eight simple rules:

Use the right size lamp in the right lixture. Too large or too small a lamp can\text{definitely cause eye discomfort. Whan you exchange burned-out lamp bulbs, make sure you get the size lamp suited to your needs.

Have enough light for each seeing task. Your eyes need more light for such task as sewing, mending, reading fine print dct, than they do for relatively simple occupations such as dining, conversation, etc. There are definite recommendations to guide you in the amount of light required.

A void have lamp hulbs.

3 Avoid bare lamp bulbs . . . they cause glare. Raw lighting is poor lighting—even if there is plenty of it. Shaded lamps are always preferable.

d Eliminate harsh contrasts (brilliant light and dark shadows). You can do this by having general room-wide light room-wide light to supplement local lighting. It is bad practice to have bright pools of light in a dark room. It makes the room appear spotty and is a cause of eye discomfort and fatigue. of eye discom-fort and fatigue.

choose the type of lamp with a reflector powl. The bowl helps to diffuse the light, assuring a soft, bleasant quality of illumination. Some of the light goes to the ceiling and is reflected back. Wherever possible choose shades with a white lining. They provide more light for the electricity used.

(a) Wipe lamp bulks frequently with a dry cloth—also the reflector bowl of your floor and table lamps. Dust and dirt sometimes reduces by one-third the amount of light you get from a lamp.
