By SOPHIE MORE

Personally, Sophie thinks New Year's Eve should be enjoyed, so it could come around more often and stay longer. You darned kids do so many different things to celebrate, that one couldn't tell 'em all. Anyway, this is what a few of you did: where, when, etc. But no matter how you helped the cause, we're sure it was one of the noisiest, longest and most hilarious celebrations in many a moon.

Such muck of you jammed the Community House for the De-Molay dinner that, to be honest, Sophie should say she couldn't see a thing but spots before her eyes. There were boxes of elegant vittin around though, and if twice possible, every one of you would get a personal citation for looking so GORGEOUS.

Babs Giles in bouffant black, with Johanna Hill round, made a swell companion for Caroline Salisbury, who was very swish in watermelon pink taffeta. (Not that they were together, dummies, but we saw 'em standing together and they looked lovely.) Jane Peabody wore black too, taffeta with an immense skirt and millions of ruffles. (Not that they were together, dummies, but we saw 'em standing together and they looked lovely.)

Betty Davis looked lovely, in a dark velvet (at least we think it was velvet) number, and she had the added fun of being escorted by Larry Quinn, the blond menace who won't wear soon. Had just the faintest touch of a glimpse of Hank McCurry and Helen Mae, talking it over in the lounge, but they looked very fit and were having no end of fun.

McCurry was dragged by Jay Lowman, De-Molay president. Both of 'em had a very nice time, they look for during most of a Boog Apple, which suddenly sprung up, they solemnly revolved in the middle, quite unimpaired of the cries of the mob. More power to 'em.

Donna Russell snuck in with someone we can't identify. The lady was sporting a daisy pink gown with matching flowers, and looked plenty smooth. Jewell Jacobs was a regular "Giddy from Heaven" in a full skirted white tulle outfit, with a twinkling pearl necklace. You should have seen date Jack Sager beam as the two of 'em received congratulations for getting engaged. (To each other, of course. Or hadn't you heard?)

Who brought Jane Jones? Chums, she was party as a piker in that white satin cherry colored dress. Her flowers matched too, which is a personal triumph for the florist or her date or both. When seen by our faithful sleuth she was chinning with Sallie Saunders, another beautiful girl, garbed in biscuit-colored brocade ala Juliet cap. And WHO told Mary Jane Kinnison to grow up to look so much like Carole Lombard? She wore a Roman-striped lame jacket over a dark skirt, came with Johanna Warner, whose pin she wears, and knocked us into a cocked hat of admiration.

And Still They Come
Peg Bailey's black tulle number with the matching sequin top was the main. We approve mightily, and also of Beulah Martin's choice. 'Twas velvet, very slinky, and an ODD pinkish shade, but as grand for a brunette as Missy Peg's was for a blond. Another brace of tall, fan t'errific gals of our smart young set, who looked swell were Jane Painter and Mary DeMog. (We spotted a white dinner gown with a Pearly blouse under the tricky E.V. jacket, and the other was DUVINE in a blue tulle effect, the sort into which one must be poured. But it's generally worth the effort.)

Suddenly one realizes that there's practically no more room, so that the best thing to do is adjourn, still mumbling faintly, "Happy New Year, you people—happy New Year, chums—etc. etc."

Not so long as about half the outfit at Kalamazoo leaped up in a fury, crying, "How come you try to rob us of Mary Palmer, huh?" She comes here for her education, NOT to Yowlanti. So we can do it let you know we've been reproached, and assure Mary that we won't jiggle her casually over the nut again. Found out two things about that tall man with the red hairs who goes to DePaul: John Church is the name. He can share it as SHOULD be shared. AND he's a Sigma Nu at college, but which, as we are prone to say, there is nothing whiffier.

Oh yes, the official herald of the season must go to Alice Lee Hoimiller, who was frolicking with Lloyd Stanley on that memorable Friday eve. She's one of the tallest (and curtest) lassies in town, and carries her height with grace which we must call SUPERB. Ah comrades, if you only KNEW what fun it is to see a tall gal extra inches around disguised as round shoulders or sagging knees. G'bye.

More and more people are coming to appreciate the value of taking VITAMIN PRODUCTS regularly. It's particularly desirable to build up resistance in winter, and even the best balanced diets can't contain enough vitamins to be effective. Then, too, taken in capsule or tablet form, vitamins are more easily absorbed into the system. Start NOW! Choose from this list of fine quality products!

LOVELY CEREMONY UNITES POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE

A lovely evening ceremony performed at Christ Church Cranbrook on Wednesday, Dec. 29, at 8:30 p. m., united in marriage

Mary Elizabeth Vinton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert King Vinton of Wadsworth road, and James Mahoney DeVine, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Herbert DeVine, of Ogden, Utah. The Rev. W. Hamilton Aulenbach, assistant rector, read the nuptials before an altar banked with white flowers and evergreen trees. The bride was lovely in a white satin wedding gown, gracefully fashioned with a low draped cowl neckline and slightly puffed sleeves. The flowing lines of the short tapered into a long train. A band of orange blossoms confined her long tulle veil, adorned with a heavy, beaded chain. A bouquet of gardenias, she was given in marriage by her father, Mr. James C. Donald H. of Findlay, O., sister of the bridegroom, attended Miss Vinton to the altar. Her white chiffon gown had a deep V neckline, and low knots of ruching were scattered about the very full skirt. A Juliet cap fashioned of narrow strips of red velvet ribbon and matching lappets completed her costume. Her flowers were a cascade of red carnations, tied with matching ribbons.

Bridemaids were Mrs. Paul A. Dietrich, Mary Ellen Menard, Lillian Thompson, June Blalock, Mary Margaret Campbell and Edith Hamilton. Their costumes, made like that of the bride, attendant, had gold caps and slippers, and cascade bouquet of the red carnations.

Mrs. Vinton chose a pale blue satin striped crepe gown with a matching bolero, for her daughter's wedding. She wore a corsage of orchids. Mrs. DeVine, who with her husband, came from Ogden for the affair, wore a Burgundy crepe, also with orchids.

Attending Mrs. DeVine as host man was Edgar A. Guest Jr., and ushering were Robert Vanderhook, James C. Donald H. Robert Jay Vinton, Arthur Batten, Lee Shinar and Paul Reuben Kempf.

Following the ceremony, a reception for 250 guests was held at the Detroit Athletic Club, where the rooms were decorated with Christmas greens. Immediately after the reception, the young couple left for Chicago, en route to

For traveling. Mrs. DeVine was attired in a lustrous red crepe outfit, over which she wore a black wool reefer piped with velvet, and silver fox scarves. Her accessories were in matching shades.
