Gift over this material for new ideas and solutions," Dr. Lemon advised.

"They should say to themselves, 'We won't do it that way again; we'll do it a better way.' Then perhaps the country will break away from the stereotyped style of living of today and show a little more creativity. This is the type that have a tomorrow.

"The situation must be seen and met squarely," the speaker went on. "We must forget party lines, forget whether we're Democrats or Republicans. We must honestly face each other under conditions as the present need for food when it is being plowed under, the desire for peace but the haste to re-arm, and the wish for morality when we have lost the little we did have."

Dr. Lemon concluded his address with an anecdote concerning a rooster which was under the impression that when he crowed at dawn, he caused the sun to rise.

George was impressed. Anybody would see that. He stood there in the aura of silence that surrounds this aboriginal basswood beauty as if he were transfixed. I could see that he was thinking of where he had been, too—because I never thought they ever did any of that up there.

Then he and Eddie went away—quietly tiptoeing down the stairway—out to attend a Dimmycratic caucus north of town where an appeal for the principles of Dimmycracy was made "in the tune of 'I Love My Uncle'."

An George didn't say anything further. But I am expecting any "now that the Auditor General will be making me bid for the only one-toed, one-armed, headless female wooden Indian in the world."

Tennis Dilemma

PROFESSIONAL tennis appears to be at the crossroads. Its future will depend largely on which direction it turns.

The appearance of either of these stars in the championship events would insure their success and heighten public interest in the tournaments. It is explained that Vines and Perry can make more money playing exhibition matches than they can in tournaments.

Still, for the sake of the pro game's future, those on the inside assert that the best would be to enter for both Vines and Perry to enter the professional tournaments. They might sacrifice some income for a week or two, but in the long run they would probably make more as a result of increased interest in the game among fans everywhere.
