

TWO IN ONE

Inspired by the springtime urge to brighten her home, she decided to paint some of the bedroom furniture...

To keep the odor of paint from permeating the house, she had the furniture moved down to the back porch...

Next-door neighbor hurried out on her porch and spied the painter at work. She was one of those helpful souls...

"That it would take so much paint to remove for all this," freely ventured the painter.

"Why you don't need either, I'll tell you exactly how to do it, and I'll save you no end of time and trouble...

"Oh—No. Please wait!" she called after Next-door neighbor. "You see, I can't use red, my wall paper is pink, bright pink, thank you, but I've decided to do it in antique white—so cool, you know."

Next-door neighbor hurried back. "Well, why didn't you tell me that before you bought all that white paint. Do you really like white, I don't make me think of hospitals...

"You're putting your things away, aren't you going to paint? How quickly you changed your mind?"

"Terrible Chief and Bloody Brothers," he squeaked. "The wicked crew met last week at Mary Jones' house..."

"How... Guess you don't know much," he sneered, craftily. "Mary Jones, how I guess, maybe you mean Marty Jones, ole dumbell, or else maybe you wanna get some ole girls into this bunch of pills..."

"The wicked crew met at Marty Jones' house," continued the scribe. "It decided to make everybody who wants to get into the crew..."

"Aw... it's this ole candle, I can't see a thing in this old black hole an' I can't get near the light with your ole feet in the way, Jones. I guess maybe you think it's easy to read in crackly the dark..."

"The wicked crew met at Marty Jones' house," continued the scribe. "It decided to make everybody who wants to get into the crew..."

He raised his head and spoke in a unpolished tone. "Say fellas, who'd we see if Junior Wize wants to be tortured?"
