

WOMEN

By Marjorie Elaine Porter
Mother sank into an easy chair for that too brief interval between luncheon dishes and dinner preparations.

Miss Porter
In which Mother had never been able to indulge. As a rule, no sooner did she step into the tub, than the house became as noisy as a fire station during a three-alarm fire.

By Carol Dweley
The bachelor girl, according to these determinedly spiteful articles written for newspapers and magazines by other bachelor girls, is at a distinct advantage if she's living in her own little home instead of with the family.

Miss Dweley
"Now look," she says, "let's approach this cooking project from a scientific angle. After all, if they cook it in the gas stove, it's not the modern woman won't be done by a mere dinner."

The most fendish racket breaks out, hissing and rattling enough to waken the dead. It's the teakettle boiling over and the career woman finally discovers that fact and shuts off the gas.
