

TWO IN ONE

By Marjorie Elaine Porter

"Hello." Just five letters in one little word—but one of the most convenient and over-worked words in the English language. It is a word for which there seems to be no substitute on certain occasions. It will express your feelings more adequately, at times, than a well thought-out speech. At other times it will save a situation when all other words fail.

You can express the warmth of friendship, casual pleasantry or polite contempt, simply by saying, "Hello." But it all depends upon how you say it, when you say it and why you say it.

For instance, you are walking along a street, and meet an old friend you haven't seen in some time. You are genuinely glad to see her, and you exclaim, "Hello," with all the warmth and friendliness in your tone that you really feel.

Another time, you meet a neighbor to whom you have never been introduced, but wishing to appear friendly and not too formal, you say casually, "Hello," to show that you really mean to be pleasant. Again, you meet someone for whom you have little regard, but are bound to recognize, and you say politely but coldly, "Hello."

Then again, the word "hello," comes spontaneously as a sudden expression of any one of a number of emotions. Like this: You come home late at night, take out your key, and just as you are about to place it in the keyhole, you notice the door is open. Without thinking, you exclaim, "Hello!," expressing surprise and alarm.

You may be chatting in a shop with a friend, and after you have just exclaimed with some emphasis that "Jean's new hat adds ten years to her age, and is a perfect fright anyway," you turn around, and there stands Jean. You are embarrassed. Caught with the goods, you try to cover up by saying, "Hello," to your friend, and you say it vaguely, (showing your confusion in spite of you) but friendly and a little conciliatory. You want her to know that you didn't mean to hurt her feelings.

The telephone rings, and you answer it with the conventional and courteous—"Hello." A strange voice informs you that Henry has been called out of town, so they just can't keep that dinner date. Completely in the dark as to whom Henry may be, and equally bewildered as to what dinner date the voice is babbling about, you say with the rising inflection of amazement in your tone "Hello!"

With the perversity of human nature, you quarrel with someone who is very dear to you. You suffer from the conflict of emotions. After a struggle with yourself, you decide you are the one to make the first advance toward reconciliation. It hurts your pride, but it's the right thing to do. You nerve yourself to say, "Hello," and you don't want to give way to tears. You don't know just how to begin—there's only one word you dare trust yourself to say, and that's—"Hello!"

Yes, it's a convenient word!

Women, the great unpredictable, are once more doing an about face. Naturally, every woman above five years old and below 99, is aware of the fact and is acting accordingly. For the benefit of the men who have no wives or daughters or sisters or mothers or aunts and who don't even know any women, here are a few hints about the woman of the 1938-39 season.

Remember last year, how everyone was bobbing violently up and down with the shag? They jerked and sidled through the trucking routine and careened in the throes of the Susie-Q. But this year marks a new dance craze and a corresponding change in ballroom behavior.

Conservative Britons invented the Lambeth Walk, a sort of anaesthetized square dance, as the last word in hilarity. And what of our American amators? They dropped the Big Apple early last spring and today, nobody would THINK of anything so athletic. It is even rumored that the walk is coming back.

Women's evening clothes are probably responsible for part of this amazing transformation. Trucking MIGHT be safe in a strapless gown, though it's Niagara Falls in a barrel. And even with all other things being equal, there's still the hair problem to consider.

The piled-up coiffure was unknown at the start of last year's formal season, except when the lady was washing her neck. Nowadays she speaks with authority of rolls and switches and even "rats." She whose shaven neck and cropped pate resembled a dog-knob not so long ago, is now copying the Gibson Girl. Gone is the picture hat, that used to droop so copily over her sleek pate? Now she wears a hat the size of a tea cup, perched on top of a haystack of hair, from which hairpins drop at regular intervals. Picture the ruin if she tried to bounce around on the dance floor!

Instead of ramming her calloused fists into heavy gloves, today's lady envelops her little white hands in a demure muff. She moves in a flurry of lace, ribbons, veils, lockets, bustles, hoops and fragility. Who knows, she may even pack a bottle of smelling salts!

WONDERS OF JUNGLE TO BE SHOWN IN FILM

Lizards that fly, fish that climb trees, tiny deer that you can put in your pocket and jungle vines that serve as drinking fountains will be shown in graphic new motion pictures when Joseph Tilton, expedition leader, speaks on "Into the Jungles of Malaya" at 3:30 Sunday afternoon, October, at the Detroit Institute of Arts. He is presented by the World Series Adventure Series.

Together with his bride, Tilton plunged elephant-back through the Malayan jungle to the headwaters of the Perak, or "River of Silver."

Here his native servants built two big bamboo rafts, and on them the party drifted, poled and shot-danglers made until they reached the Bay of Bengal, 250 miles distant. They filmed the little-known Semang on pygmy tribes, Senoi hill people. With motion pictures Tilton tells the full story of native, insects, giant serpents and other dangers of the deep jungle.

Tilton assisted Martin Johnson on that explorer's last expedition into Borneo.

Miss Teeler—"It's just too bad. You said you wouldn't give away the secret I told you."

Miss Toney—"I didn't give it away. I merely exchanged your secret for another."
