HARVEST

nial festival at which 2,000 persons will sing and a symphony orchestra will play will be from Aug. 12 to 15.

Within gunshot of the business section of Grand Haven on the Lake Michigan coast are several unique things: (1) Scores of sand dunes; (2) miles of white, dazzling beach; (3) 300 summer cottages in Highland Park and the "North Shore," both within city limits; (4) an almost ice-free harbor, home port of the U. S. coast guard cutter, "Escanaba," and (5) diversified industries that normally employ 3,000 persons.

Mix with this several beautiful parks and modern municipal buildings and community hospital. Then you have another example of why Michigan cities, such as Grand Haven, continually attract new industrial concerns.

The Oval state park, facing the lake, leads off others in annual attendance. It's a dull day when less than 100 trailers are parked there. Nearby is Spring Lake, seven miles longer, where the famed Hopkins gardens are always open during the summer months to visitors. A speed boat will take you from the big lake over inland waters, right to the estate of Mrs. Claude C. Hopkins, widow of the late Claude C. Hopkins, who was dean of modern advertising and president of Lord & Thomas, Chicago, until his death in 1932.

Cherry Capital

As Michigan is the cherry capital of the United States, it was inevitable that a festival would be held in age-old celebration for nature's blessing of a good crop. July 12, 13 and 14 are the dates announced for the National Cherry Festival at Traverse City. Ships of the Great Lake Training Fleet will participate in the program this year. And that distinctive product of Michigan's tourist business, the Festival Queen, will be properly enthroned, amid parades and whatnot.

An automobile trip into the Leelanau peninsula through Suttons Bay, Leelanau and Northport, with perhaps a side tour encircling lower Glenn lake, will reveal countless miles of trees redden with fruit—a sight in itself worth seeing.

Brookway Mountain Drive

Only a day away from the state capital is the historic Copper country and its Keweenaw peninsula setting out like a slender finger into the deep blue waters of Lake Superior. The shore is rocky as Maine's. Pine and spruce trees grow in profusion. At Copper Harbor, a gem of nature itself, is a modern golf course with a clubhouse and log cabins to cater to your fancy.

The Brookway Mountain drive is breathtaking. From a high point, if the day is clear, you can easily see Isle Royale.

Highway people say that at least one million people have enjoyed this mountain drive in the past five years.

We cite it as an example of the varied lure that Michigan offers everywhere you go.

Cracking in Winter

Undiscovered by all but a few in Michigan is Grayling's winter sport park. By next winter, and surely within the next five years, this tobogganing and skating spot in the pine woods will receive the tourist recognition that it so fully merits. The United States government through its park service has been lavishing money on the development of ski trails, toboggan slides, and better facilities for accommodating the thousands who are expected to enjoy all this.

A civilian conservation camp is stationed there. A comprehensive plan of development has been prepared.

We rode down the slide on "Suicide Sal" at midnight with Harry Kinko of Ann Arbor, Ink White of Gladwin, the general mayor of Alpena, and one checker-sold individual by the sally nickname of "Spikie." Bright and gay clothes. A roaring fire in a stove in the cabin. Six degrees below zero and a star-sparkling sky above.

A taxan visitor in our party said it was like a fairy story. But it was just another picture of Michigan's recreational attractions—many of which thousands of Michigan residents have yet to discover.
