'Dear Dad'-Letters of A College Freshman

By Norman Lyle, Jr. Dear Dad, The other day I ran across a classmate in a literary magazine published by a near-by school. It dealt with a subject near to the heart of every boy at school—his father at home. In brief, the subject of letters written home asking for "a small advance on my next month's allowance".

The standard unlooked-for item in the college boy's budget is text books. "The prof didn't tell us about this book at the start of the year, so we can't see that I didn't know I'd have to buy it. Just have to have it, Dad." Then there's the heavy data book. I hadn't planned on going to this formal, Dad, but the girl practically asked me to take her, so now you see, you'll just have to help me out. And the assessment among house members is to do the house duty. The house dues didn't meet the house budget, so the president's declared an assessment among the members. Dad, of course, I have a chip in it. Clothes are an item that can be made to fit the need. "I haven't a single pair of socks to wear. Dad. Holes in all of 'em, from heel to toe. So I picked up a copy of this order over the week-ender. I had to have shirts and ties to match. Some of us make a clean break at the whole thing. "It's just a fool's job, that's all. I know I'm a cad for running it up, but I'm neighbors, shop at A & P with a new idea! Said we, "Why not sell everything at low prices every day—and in that way help Mrs. America to live better—and spend less." Today A & P Super Markets are the answer to better living at lower prices in thousands of homes right here in town. Many of your neighbors shop at A & P—and save real money doing it. Come in today. "The more often you buy at A & P—the more your savings are sure to be!"

You understand, Dad, that my letters never ask for advances on my next month's allowance. No, I'm working into next May's allowance. I have to save a few dollars. I will have drawn into my tuition fee next fall. But let's not be narrow-minded. Let's all have a big, let us have a broad view of this whole affair. What is money? This after discussion is distinctly unnecessary. I don't want to go, but the girl practically asked me to take her. Your Son
