From the Women's Angle

By Nellie Hurley Minife

Detroit and suburban communities have a glimpse of a lost tradition this week when three dozen stalwart hussy throated ambassadors of a lost regime made their annual appearance in a concert to Detroit and called forth an audience that filled every seat in the auditorium, crammed the orchestra pit and hung up the "Standing Room Only" sign.

It is not just the high boots and black blouses that make these girls so popular each year. It isn't even the huge audiences that are beyond the question of a doubt the girls make glorious today. They are ghosts from the past that are almost longed for and the utter romance and tradition that are the girls of each brawny giant who comes to the concert.
