From the Women's Angle

By Nellie Hurley Minifie

Have you seen the meanest anan in town? It is around these parts and if I could get my hands on him today I would likerally tear him by part timb by Bubble was a beautiful kitten. She ruled the house with an iron paw and the slightest min-step on the part of any of the two leg ged creatures in the hose with when the ged creatures in the hose with an iron paw and the slightest things were running in their usual routine before she curled up in the only comfortable chair in the sitting room.

She wasn't much of a cat probably looked a little moth eaten. But she had a gorprous feather duster tail that she could, on occarion and circumstance of Order than the grown and circumstance of the probably looked a little moth eaten. But she had a gorprous feather duster tail that she could, on occarion and the state of the state of the probably looked a little moth eaten. But she had as gorprous feather duster tail that she could, on occarion and the state of the state of the probably looked as the state of the state of the probably looked as the state of the probably looked as the state of the state of the state of the state of the probably looked as the state. But the meanest man in town put an end to all of that. Now we'll never need to watch that she doesn't curl up on the eider-down quilt. We'll never ever again be enharrassed because she arched her back and spit at the neighborhood dogs. It will not be supported the state of the st

We like old houses. A forsaken, once-beautiful one, with ac-tive grounds, has an especial appeal, but any old house, how-ender the control of the control of the control of the con-many winters and been smiled upon by a long procession of beau-tiful sprnigs, conjures to us pictures of the possible happy family life that once grew and was sheltered there-

If that once grew and was sheltered there.

There was that first day, with all its thrills, when the family moved in, wakering in a long procession of happy days to come.
