From the Women's Angle

By Belle Harley Minnell

The recent admission of women to the University of Michigan has created a great deal of excitement. Women are now able to pursue their academic studies in the same way as men. The change is significant not only in terms of access to education, but also in terms of the way in which society views women's roles.

The new role of women in society is being reflected in the increasing number of women entering the workforce. Women are now able to work outside the home and contribute to the family finances. This has led to changes in family dynamics and the way in which society views gender roles.

The admission of women to the University of Michigan has also led to changes in the way in which women are viewed in society. Women are now seen as capable of achieving academic success and are able to compete on equal terms with men.

For all these reasons, the admission of women to the University of Michigan is a significant event. It marks a step forward in the process of gender equality and is a sign of progress towards a more just society.
