Historic Hoaxes

Nature Faker Par Excellence THE new champion of all writers of nature fakes was undoubtedly "Lester Green" of Procton, Conn.

When he told how a setting of hen's eggs, which he had found in a block of ice taken from a flooded meadow, hatched out chickens covered with fur instead of feathers...

When he told of spraying his apple trees with glue, which not only prevented the apples from falling but also preserved them in a fresh condition on the trees throughout the winter...

The 1939 Harvest Picture

SMALLER, but sufficient—the 1939 is the composite United States harvest outlook for 1939.

As agriculture swings into its most active period of the year, prediction is that total production will not be up to the bumper level of '38 and '37.

The western ranges took a beating from a scorching July. New England drew the most disastrous spots, farmers face few shortages.

As of Aug. 1, fruit prospects indicated the largest production of apricots and cherries on record. Peaches, pears, and grapes seem to be well above normal.
