

TEA FOR TWO

only a few weeks before. She is applying to Avery, she said, for Avery is a 24-hour job in himself.

As soon as she seated herself on a sofa to the right of the fireplace she launched into a discussion that led from seed catalogs to painting, to the western trip from which she had just returned. She discussed Japanese affairs and finally to the blond little Avery who is the proverbial apple of his mother's eye.

Mrs. Greene has several interesting theories in child raising which she is applying to Avery. She confided to me. Since he has been old enough to take notice she has been encouraging individuality in the youngster and at the same time treating him with a lot of rein. She reads him as a contemporary and she insists on his respect for her more mature viewpoint.

Together she and I will buy small or large quantities of bananas at the store, where they will purchase dills or bread-and-butter pickles. But they are contemporaries up to a certain point and no further. When the young man begins his arguments on why it is better to stay up for another half hour before going to bed, he is sent packing. But when he stated simply and firmly he didn't want them she began an eat-the-peaches campaign.

It was a horrible scene, she remembers. But when the baby looked her in the eye and wailed with his emphatic, "Mummy, I will never eat peaches again," she knew she had met defeat. At that particular moment she told me, she felt with a sudden and sinking feeling that her child was more grown-up than she.

Child More Adult
By way of illustration she told of the day Avery decided he didn't want his mother's peaches. It was a ridiculous one, she recounted, for he had always eaten them and to all appearances he was a peaches eater. But when he stated simply and firmly he didn't want them she began an eat-the-peaches campaign.

It was a horrible scene, she remembers. But when the baby looked her in the eye and wailed with his emphatic, "Mummy, I will never eat peaches again," she knew she had met defeat. At that particular moment she told me, she felt with a sudden and sinking feeling that her child was more grown-up than she. If the situation had been overlooked, if she had lifted him from his high chair and let him go when he first declined to eat them, she feels everything would have been forgotten and would, in fact, have been completely out of her mind. As things now stand Avery

But It's True

Other interests. Too
But she has other interests besides the very young son. Mrs. Greene said:
"I have so many interests," she confided to me early in our chat, that I sometimes wish I were five or six different persons so that I could follow each hobby to its completion. As things are now I can't say that I am interested in this and this and this," she indicated slices in the air, "and not in that," and here she hand waved vaguely in the other direction.

To illustrate the diversity of her interests she told me that while at the University of Michigan she took several courses in the architectural college; although she received her degree in the school of arts, literature and science. On coming out of school she dabbled a little in interior decorating and finally settled down to a job that had her rewriting the old Ferry Seed Catalog.

Decorating
During this period that she was writing she described beans, peatmoss and vents until she was growing thin in her sleep. Her writing was eventually abandoned, however, when she made the discovery that much as she liked to read her material when it was printed, she didn't care too much about putting it down on paper.

While working she was married and when she quit several months after her marriage, she thought she would have time for the many interests which she had never been able to pursue before.
But staying at home, she related, showed her she was no great shakes as a housekeeper, and it also proved to her that she would probably never take her housework any too seriously. In the meantime the Greens had moved from Detroit to Birmingham where they had built a home on Mohegan avenue.

Here for a time she was involved in decorating the house that since has appeared in a national magazine as a typical example of modern architecture and design in the Middle West. For something like five years now the Greens have been living in this house and they've become so accustomed to it that they sometimes forget it is still considered a novelty in these parts.
Shortly after their home had been completed and this is her favorite story—Mrs. Greene stopped

THIS AND THAT

It is Canada's largest air training school where the recruits receive their first flying lessons in combat tactics. It requires from 12 to 18 weeks with 160 hours in the air. The train pilots for ordinary military tactics, after they go to the final air training field at Camp Borden and thence to England. Do you know that it requires about 10 men in various ground service activities to keep one pilot in the air? I met a goodly number of Trenton's officers and instructors who are still in the States to other pilot training stations in Canada—the Dominion is planning no less than 16 training stations where 2,000 able flyers will be turned out each year. Canada will become the aerial training place for the entire British Commonwealth of Nations; which suggests that Britain knows that this and future wars will be won by aerial combat equipment. Canada has been selected to do this air training job for number of reasons; she is closest to Britain; air conditions in Britain are often foggy, not so in Canada. Canada will spend $600,000,000 annually on her air force; more than 40,000 men will be required just to operate this air service. Don't forget, either, that Canada was selected because she is next door to the United States, the greatest industrial nation on earth. I met several Americans at Trenton who are taking the military course because of their experience in flying; they are still citizens of the U. S. only 50,000 men are required to operate this air service. The greatest industrial nation on earth. THE REAL PRETEL THAT WAS 150 FEET HIGH—MUNICH, GERMANY, 1906...
Son of the famous major league second baseman, Eddie Collins Jr., made his remarkable hitting record playing against his father's alma mater. The preitel was made by a firm interested in the product, fell one night when rats got at it. According to Ferrell Hale, Rembrandt biographer, the artist was married when he was eight years old. The Stantons all died at more than 20-year intervals.

last because being an only child for 10 years taught her that you could see the best of the last and only one at leisure.
Aside from that the Greens always agree.
The injured person, Mervin Whitcomb, 12 years old, was riding in his brother, Erwin Whitcomb, 20 years old, of 50 Portage street, Highland Park. He received cut lips and a front tooth knocked out, and their car was damaged to the extent of $100.
The crash occurred, according to the police report, when A. Burman, 1012 E. Woodward, a left turn of Woodward. The machine of A. McKinnon, 10 East George street, Highland Park, was struck by Burman, but when Whitcomb's car crashed into Burman's, the latter's then hit McKinnon's. Burman estimated that it would cost $50 to fix his car, while McKinnon's damage was only $25.

LIBRARY

In brief, lists the powers and rules which have governed the Board in the past.
Section 1 provides that the City shall levy a tax of not less than one-half mill or more than one mill for library purposes.
Section 2 provides that the City treasurer shall have custody of the money in a separate account and shall issue checks on properly authorized vouchers of the library board.
Section 3 lists various duties and powers of the library board.
The Board shall have power to purchase or lease additional grounds, to occupy, lease or erect an appropriate additional building or buildings for the use of said library.
Commissioner Harry E. Hissett and several others were puzzled by the power which would be granted to build and lease buildings, while the board has no power to incur debt.
"It seems funny to give power to the board to do something for which it can't raise money," he said.
It was then brought out that it is possible some one might make a substantial gift which would make possible additional buildings, should that ever be necessary.
Commissioner Frank S. Packard opined that the addition of the phrase "with available funds" would provide the necessary check.
"Of course, we are not concerned about the present Library Board," Mayor John F. Martz assured the committee. "We are thinking about the future."
He added, "I am not particularly concerned about that part of the ordinance for Charles Lewis is pretty careful about what he does."
Mr. Hissett and the committee assured the Commission that it would be agreeable if Packard's qualifying phrase was added on if the power to construct new buildings were deleted. In such case, the Commission, which now holds title to the library building and is paying off the $96,000 debt, would reverse the power to erect new buildings, etc.
A further study will be made this week and changes, if any, will be made to the original draft next Tuesday evening when the resolution placing the charter amendment on the ballot will be adopted by the Commission.

Salesman Is Guilty of Using Profanity in Argument Here

Found guilty of using profane and indecent language, Ludwin Boraks, of Highland Park, was fined $5 and given a 30-day suspended sentence in Justice Forbes S. Hascal's court Wednesday.
Boraks, a vacuum cleaner salesman, was arrested on complaint of Mrs. G. P. Griffith, 1455 Bird street.
Boraks, it was said, used profane language and called Mrs. Griffith names, using among other things the term, "chilly."
Witnesses for Mrs. Griffith were her sister, Mrs. Helen Spring, and a neighbor, Mrs. Patrick Shields, who also heard the expletives.

Clubwomen to Attend Conservation School

LANSING—Two hundred Michigan clubwomen, representing 50 communities, are expected to attend the seventh annual Conservation School for Michigan Women to be held Sept. 20-22 at headquarters in Potosi, Mo.
Sponsored by the Federated Garden Clubs of Michigan and the department of conservation, the school's purpose is to give women of the state first-hand knowledge of conservation practices in Michigan and opportunities of seeing outstanding projects and scenic features.
A scenic trip on Cross Village trail, visit to the Indian handicraft project at Cross Village and to Wilderness state park, and talks on water, soil, pollution and other basic topics by outstanding authorities are scheduled on the two-day program. Walter E. Hastings, department staff photographer, will show his most recently taken motion pictures.
