BASEBALL

run Carey hit the ball a terrific clout, and as the outfielders vigorously and profanely attempted to urge their reluctant steeds into a close proximity with the pellet, Phil once more showed sparks of that old Carey do-or-die-I'm-afraid spirit. Although the half-way method, he sunk his teeth into the beast's ears, got a body scissor and a hammerlock, and was off with a clattering of hooves, a cloud of dust, and a hearty Hi-Yo Sivaah-h Away!

Well, he made a homeride of it, scoring Norman Flemington somewhere ahead of him, but he was the exception that proved the rule. Baserunning, or rather baseriding, Bill Cummings and Third Baseman La Charity had their troubles, too, not the least of which was the feigned confusion among the spectators as to which was the donkey. It is only fair to say, however, that the donkey was pleased with the comparison, either. And then there was Jack Boomer, who worriedly, but studiously, ignored that there was a donkey foal imbibing brupper from his mouth. Mr. Boomer wonders what Emily Post would have him do if a hit came his way at such a time.

At the close of the game there were a lot of sadder but wiser baseball players announcing their bruises around town. It wasn't as bad as it might have been, though. As one of the lads (a Democrat) put it: "Suppose we had to ride elephants!"
