IN DECEMBER

The snow lies soft and still and white and deep. On all the walks and fences, on the grass and trees, along the road are steep. Huge frosted drifts. There is no place to use. Unless one makes great hollows with his feet. Like cutting jagged places in a sheet. Or mammoth coveliet. Keen blows And stings my cheeks and yet I do not mind. All the familiar landmarks that I knew Have vanished, and beneath the vast dense blue Of heaven, diamond in crystal sand Is a very lovely world, a fairyland!
