PHILADELPHUS-MOCKORANGE The shrub of the moment is the Mockorange. Sometimes known as Syringa, its latin name is Philadelphus. The tallest-growing old-fashioned, fragrant Sweet Mockorange is known as Coronarius. It is a generous bloomer and a sturdy shrub. Use it as a single specimen or as a hedge or background. For more special uses, where a lower shrub is desired, the Lemonie hybrids are valuable: Avalanch, Double MontBlanc, Gerbe de Neige Favorite semi-double flowers and Boule d'Argent, Albino Double. Another group named P. Virginialis has especially large semi-double blooms. All Mockoranges bloom on wood made the previous season so that any pruning in early spring will remove the blossoms. Pruning should be done now as soon as the blooms are finished. In the old fashioned type cut out very old wood and thin the branches, if necessary. The lemonie hybrids need more radical treatment. Cut more than the ground stems that have bloomed. This will allow the new stems coming up to develop and produce next year's flowers in profusion.

7 TO 14 DEGREES COOLER Users say: "It's like sleeping outdoors!"

This is NOT the best house-cooling method in the world, but it's mighty good—as hundreds of satisfied users will tell you. Attic fan house-cooling has the virtue of being simple and inexpensive... and it achieves surprisingly effective results. Even when there is not a breath of air stirring outside, you can often cool your house 7 to 14 degrees in the evening, making your bedrooms comfortable for sleeping.

Here is the way it works: During the day, the hot sun beating down on the roof converts your attic into a huge oven, with temperatures often reaching 130 degrees. Much of this heat is transferred through the ceilings to the rooms below, and at night, this burden of hot air hangs in the house, even after the temperature outdoors has fallen considerably.

An attic fan changes all this. After sundown, open your windows and flip the switch of the fan. Instantly its large, powerful blades blow away the oppressive blanket of heat in the attic and set up a gentle circulation of air all through your house. A flood of cool night air is drawn in through the open windows, making your rooms delightfully comfortable. An attic fan costs only about 1/2 an hour to operate. Prices range from $50 up (installation extra).

Electrical dealers, department stores, and fan dealers will gladly give you full information about this low-cost method of house cooling. Telephone today. The Detroit Edison Company. (We do not sell or install this equipment.)
