Publishers Are Important Factor In National Defense, Speaker Says

"Ideas are weapons." Olive Deane Hornell said Monday afternoon in "Modern Makers of Books—Prominent American Publishers and Their Authors," the first in her series of lectures on current books and plays for the University of Michigan Extension Service. Publishers are the purveyors of ideas, she went on, and therefore are an important factor in our national defense, an especially important factor when we realize that American publishers are the only ones in the world today whose activities are unenclosed.

Miss Hornell told the colorful story of American publishing from the arrival of the first printing press in the colonies to the time when it was set up in Cambridge to print sermons and pamphlets for use in the American Revolution.

It was Matthew Carey who introduced the "royalty" system by which a publisher assumes full responsibility for the success or failure of a book, and distributing an author's book throughout the country.

The oldest American publisher today is the Methodist Book Concern, founded in 1789 and continuously active under that name ever since, but as it is a religious publisher only, it did not come into Miss Hornell's account so fully as the "general" publishers, those concerned with supplying the general public with good reading of all kinds.

Brothers, founded in 1817, is the oldest and largest of the six great American publishers, who have celebrated their hundredth anniversary of publication within the past few years. Macmillan and company, founded in 1888, is the largest of all American publishers.

Miss Hornell told the interesting story of how Macmillan and company found the great all time success, "Gone With the Wind," and also of the discovery of Thomas Wolfe by Maxwell Perkins of Scribner's. She differentiated between the ordinary publisher, who were well established before 1900, and those who have been established since the turn of the century, calling the latter somewhat facetiously the "stream-line" publishers.

First of these was Doubleday, Doran and company, which has made notable contribution to the merchandising phases of modern publishing. She also told of the remarkable and dramatic success of Simon and Schuster, describing their handsome new glass-enclosed office built as a penthouse on one of the terrace floors of the Rockefeller Plaza building in Radio City.

Her talk was illustrated by an exhibit of an important fall book "Hawkeye" by Phil Stong, the first in the new Southern States series to be published under the auspices of Dodd, Mead and Company, showing this book in every stage of production, from author's manuscript through various proofs to the finished bound volume.

The course is sponsored here by those interested in building up the Oakland County Library Organization Fund. The next lecture, to be given Nov. 11, is "Makers of Our Magazines."

TEA COMPLIMENTS VISITING KENTUCKIANS

Mrs. John C. Strother entertained about 40 guests at tea on Wednesday afternoon, at her home on Madison avenue, honoring her mother, Mrs. Lee Basket, and her sister, Miss Carolyn Basket, of Henderson, Ky., who are here for a visit of several months. An arrangement of vivid fall flowers, flanked by white tapers, graced the tea table, at which Mrs. William D. Buick presided.

Mr. and Mrs. Strother and their infant son, Jim French, returned only recently from a two weeks motor trip to Washington, D. C., and Rippemead, Va. In the latter place, they were guests of Mr. Strother's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Don J. Strother.

Brushed up hair, hip-line jackets, clever draperies, beads, embroidery, raffish, all contribute to the new note of sophistication for the winter girl or woman of 1940.
