4 Different Ways To Fry Foods

Modern scientific cooks know their words. They keep up with the fast-growing list of special terms used in cookery. They know the fine distinction between "pan-broiling," "sauteing," "frying," and "braising."
 "Pan-broiling" is one way to cook meat in a skillet on top of the stove. But home economics staff members at Michigan State College explain that the special point about pan-broiling is cooking without added fat, without water, and without a cover on the skillet. It is the method to use for tender chops and steaks that have fat of their own and are quickly cooked. Pour off the fat as it renders out so the meat will not be frying.

 "Frying" is a different cooking process. It means actually to cook in fat. Sometimes the fat is deep enough to cover the food entirely, as in frying chicken or croquettes. But one can also fry with shallow fat in a skillet. Hash and meat patties are good examples of shallow-fat frying; and some meats, such as sausages and bacon, fry in their own fat.

 "Sauteing" is another puzzler, all the more confusing because it comes from a French word meaning to jump. Sauteing is a cross between pan-broiling and frying. It means to brown the food in a little fat and turn it often to keep it from sticking.
 The word "braising" comes up again and again in meat cookery. To braise means to brown in a little hot fat, and then cook the meat in steam—with or without added liquid. Swiss steak and pot roast are good examples. These meat cuts are not so tender to start with, but, properly braised, can be cut with a fork when they come to the table.

Desire for Closets Tops Women's Poll
 Convenience features voted for by Cleveland club women in a poll of "What Do Women Want in a Home?" included: plenty of closets with the right kind of built-in shelving for each one; adequate electric outlets for lamps and appliances, as well as for lights on dark stairways and in closets;

noiseless plumbing equipment; uniform window shades throughout the house; complete copper piping; automatic heat and hot water; insulation; a first-floor lavatory; shower in the bathroom; plenty of surface work space in the kitchen; and built-in features including a clothes chute, desk and filing space in the kitchen, the dinette buffet, and medicine cabinets in the bathroom.
