Pontiac Orchestra Reaches Its Peak

By FENTON R. MATHEWS

Because of the arctic wave, the concluding concert of the Pontiac Philharmonic Orchestra was held in Kingswood Auditorium Tuesday evening, instead of the Greek Theatre at Cranbrook. Four concerts have been held outdoors this season, however, a veritable battle of wits with the weather man has been resorted to in several instances.

This final concert was by far the best of the series. The laxity of the players vanished completely and the director, Cesar Chanofe, was able to do as any director would like to do; that is, be free to direct and have the players follow him.

Professional Aspect

There was a truly professional aspect to this concert with attack and shading, also change of tempo of such quality that the concert was delightful. The intonation of the various instruments was decidedly better due to the fact that the concert was held indoors. About the only instrument that can withstand the rigors of damp weather and the night air of the open is the triangle and since this is not used a great deal, it is the entire instrumentation of the orchestra that must suffer poor tonality.

Some boys apparently don't know that the firecracker season is long since past. Patrolman Leo Stiers collared a Madison avenue boy Saturday evening, took away his firecrackers, and told him to behave himself.
